THE INFANTRY

YOU'RE IN THE INFANTRY

Those of us who can say those words . . . let's say them with pride, but softly. Let's not shout them. Let's not stick out our chests. Let's say them with a kind of awe.

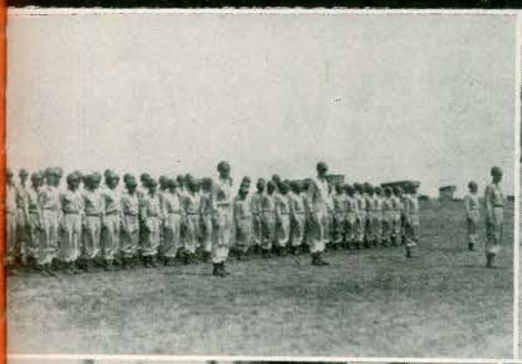

We can't tell much about it . . . and wouldn't if we could. Maybe we'll say it's "rugged." Maybe we'll get across the idea that you have to be quick in the head, as well as quick with your hands, to get along in the infantry. And that, even so, your chances aren't too bright. But that's about all. Few will ever know what it means in a war like this, to be "in the Infantry," the knockout corps, the Army's infighters. But we can make the world remember at least . . . that a doughboy has to master a dozen weapons . . . that skill and smartness count for as much as muscle;

. . . That he may have to live for days on end on congealed food, in mud and slop halfway to his waist, where the rain is iron, the wind is cordite and the light is liquid fire;

. . . And that, at the end, he comes face to face with a personal enemy . . . another Infantryman whose ten inches of cold steel snake out for his belly, and whose gun butt swings in a short quick arc to crumple his skull.

Face to face . . . that's the Infantry's war. They're out where that thin black line moves forward on the map . . . to kill or be killed.

I congratulate the 123rd Infantry on this pictorial history of their combat operations. However, no written or pictorial account could actually do justice to the human elements involved in the splendid record of achievement established by the officers and men of this fine regiment. They conducted themselves during their first combat action in the Toem-Wakde area in New Guinea in a manner which established my conviction that they could be relied upon in any combat situation. During the operations in Northern Luzon, under most strenuous combat conditions, they acquitted themselves in a manner which brought the admiration and respect of all higher echelons of command. Without any preparatory mountain warfare training, without any special equipment or weapons designed for such operations and always faced with practically insurmountable terrain difficulties the 123rd Infantry invariably captured their objectives on schedule. Usually their progress far exceeded my hopes. During the operations from the Lingayen Gulf to Baguio this regiment, with their supporting Engineers, advanced over extremely rugged virgin mountain terrain, built their roads as they advanced, and supplied their forward elements by Igorot carry parties. Their accomplishments were superb. In spite of the fierce resistance encountered and the terrific physical hardships of mountain warfare the exceptional esprit and morale of the men was always evident in the energetic manner in which every mission was performed. The 123rd Infantry, from its indomitable leader, Colonel Paul C. Serff, to the most obscure private, will always have my deepest admiration and respect. I congratulate this unit on its exceptionally fine War record.

THREE GREAT LEADERS

MAC ARTHUR
KRUEGER

GENERAL WALTER KRUEGER

Often described as "just about the best-educated man in the American Army," General Walter Krueger was given command of the Sixth Army when it was organized early in 1943. The Sixth Army became the fighting force of the Pacific and under Krueger's guidance, his troops pushed the Japanese steadily back—right to the gates of Tokyo.

General Krueger was born to a military tradition older than the United States. His father, a Prussian colonel, died when Walter was eight years old and the widow brought her children to America a short time later. Walter Kueger joined the army in 1898, after the outbreak of the Spanish-American War. Mustered out the following year he soon reinlisted for duty in the Philippines. Once in those islands he rose to the rank of Sergeant and was commissioned in 1901. After becoming an officer, Krueger began his military career in earnest. Two tours of duty in the Philippines, plus a knowledge of the army gained in his rise from the ranks from private to general—during which time he successively commanded a squad, a platoon, a company, a regiment, a brigade, a division, and an army, made General Krueger a leader to be respected and loved. After besting the Japanese in 16 operations and aiding in the setting up of the initial occupation of Japan, Krueger returned to the United States and has now retired from the service.

All of the tactical operations engaged in by the 123d were under the direction of Krueger and his Sixth Army.

GENERAL DOUGLAS MAC ARTHUR

An illustrious army leader who followed in the footsteps of his famous military father, General Douglas MacArthur was the guiding genius of the Pacific War all the way—from the defense of the Philippines through to the occupation of Japan.

A graduate of the 1903 class of West Point, MacArthur served on General Pershing's staff in the First World War. Later he served as Chief-of-Staff in Washington and as Superintendent of West Point. He served two tours as Commander of American forces in the Philippines, where his father had previously served as Military Governor, and after retirement from the American army, was appointed Field Marshall of the Philippine Army—a title no other American General ever held.

At the outbreak of the present war, he guided the heroic stands on Luzon until he was ordered to Australia by President Roosevelt to make preparations for a counter-offensive. The hard road back to victory, through the many Pacific islands which had been taken over by the Japanese, reflects his military genius. He drove the enemy relentlessly from New Guinea, the Philippines and then went on to set up the occupation of Japan. When military history is recorded for all time, MacArthur's strategy in the Pacific will be among the classics.

All through its combat operations, the 123rd served under MacArthur.

MAJOR GENERAL P. W. CLARKSON

A soft-spoken Texan, Major General Percy W. Clarkson, assumed command of the 33rd Division, parent organization of the 123rd Infantry Regiment, early in 1943. He led the Division through three rugged campaigns and the low casualty rate record that his units established is one that is hard to match anywhere in the American Army.

A graduate of Texas A and M College, Clarkson entered the army shortly after graduation from that school. He was commissioned after attending the first classes held at Fort Leavenworth. Later, he served in the First World War and was with the occupation forces in Germany for a year after the Armistice. Later he attended the leading service schools and served on the faculty of West Point from 1928 to 1933.

A devout follower of athletics, derived from his own days as an athlete, General Clarkson also enjoys fishing and has a wide diversity of other interests including gadget making and a love of good music.

Following occupation duties with the Division in the Kyoto-Kobe area of Japan, Clarkson returned to the States for a brief sojourn before again going to Japan to serve as Deputy Chief-of-Staff at MacArthur's headquarters. While back in this country he was presented with an honorary degree from his Alma Mater, Texas A and M.

The 123rd was fortunate to have a man of the calibre of General Clarkson guiding its destinies all through its combat assignments. His interests were always towards the welfare and well-being of the men under him.

CHIEF OF STAFF

GENERAL GEORGE C. MARSHALL

America's Chief-of-Staff during the Second World War, General George C. Marshall, deserves recognition in this history, not only because he guided the Army's policies during the hectic years of turmoil but also because he has a direct tie with the 33rd Division. General Marshall, as a Colonel, served as Senior Instructor for the Illinois National Guard for three years—October, 1933 to October, 1936.

A graduate of Virginia Military Institute's class of 1901, Marshall was commissioned as a Second Lieutenant of Infantry the following year. His first tour of duty was in the Philippines; several years later he served a second tour in those islands.

During the First World War, General Marshall (then a temporary Major) served with the First Division for a year and was then assigned to the General Staff. In May of 1919, he became an aide to General Pershing and served in that capacity until 1924. Ordered to China, Marshall spent the next three years in the Far East. The valuable background he obtained there materially assisted him in his recent difficult assignment in China.

After several assignments in the States, following his duty in China, Marshall became the Senior Instructor for the Illinois National Guard—the organization which became the 33rd Division for duty in the Second World War. In that position he laid the groundwork for the sterling performances of the Illinois units.

In 1939, General Marshall assumed the Office of Chief-of-Staff with the rank of full General and he served at that post until the war in both theatres of operation had been successfully culminated. Resigning at the end of this tour in Washington, General Marshall immediately accepted the post as Ambassador to China with the specific mission of bringing together the conflicting forces of that war-torn country.

General Marshall's ability, foresight and leadership did much to bring the war to a speedy and successful finish and we of the Regiment can be proud of the personal link that bound him to us.

INTRODUCTION

by

COLONEL PAUL C. SERFF

Regimental Commander

I am indeed happy that this Regimental History edited by Major Stan W. "Scoop" Carlson affords me the opportunity—which our rapid demobilization denied—of saying a parting word to you who served with the "One, Two, Three."

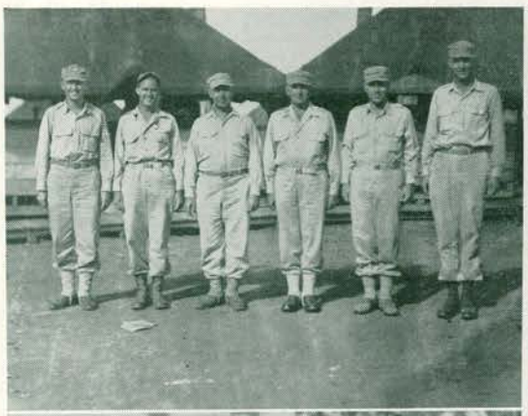

It was my privilege and honor to have commanded the 123rd Infantry from almost the day of its activation until its deactivation some three years later. No period of service during my military career, past or future, can ever supplant in my heart the pride and affection I have by virtue of my associations with you, the members of the Regiment.

A Regiment is like unto a family and ours was indeed a happy and successful one—one that by reason of cohesion and innate pride in achievement conquered desert and mountain, heat and cold, hardship and adversity to drive a fanatical and stubborn enemy right to the gates of Tokyo.

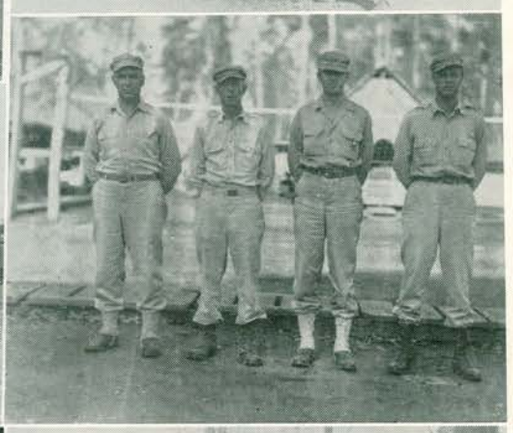

I know that each of you shares with me this pride in the Regiment—our Regiment. I know that you justly can and always will recall with satisfaction and pleasure the part you played—and played so well—in creating and maintaining an organization which commanded the respect and admiration of all and which was never found wanting in the carrying to a successful completion of any assigned task.

It was—it is—your Regiment. Through the pages of this book you can again follow along its paths of victory—not forgetting those comrades and friends we left on foreign shores. With each of you always go my best wishes and my deep gratitude for your loyalty, devotion and courage.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE
THIRTY-THIRD DIVISION

The courage of a handful of hardy pioneers who became the first settlers of the area which is now the State of Illinois forms an appropriate backdrop to the history of the 33rd Division. Ever since those stalwart trail-blazers first organized for unselfish service and devotion to home and country, the history of the units which preceded the organization of the division during the First World War, and the subsequent history of the Division itself through two wars, has been an impressive one.

The antecedents of the Division date back to 1812 when the settlers on the prairie organized into the provincial militia of Illinois. The purpose of this group was to bring law, order and peace to the outer ramparts of the United States, a struggling young nation at that time. In the Indian Campaign, the War of 1812, the Blackhawk War of 1831-1832, the Spanish-American War and the Mexican Border Dispute, these troops from the State of Illinois performed valiantly.

The services of one of these early organizations, the Illinois Volunteers, is exemplified by one of its members, Abraham Lincoln. He later became President of the United States and gained immortality as one of the greatest leaders in the history of our nation.

The 33rd Division was organized in July, 1917, at Camp Logan, Texas. Composed of units from the Illinois National Guard, it became known as the Illinois Division and was frequently referred to as the Prairie Division because Illinois is called the Prairie State. During the present war the Division was commonly called the Gold Cross Division, a designation derived from the shoulder patch. Frequent replacements from all sections of the country made this a more appropriate identification.

In the spring of 1918, troops of the 33rd Division embarked for overseas. The first units arrived in France in May with other components arriving the following month. After training with the Fourth Army, two of the Regiments went into front-line action. On July 4th, 1918, these two Regiments, the 131st and 132nd Infantries, were brigaded with Australian troops to successfully attack Hamel and the Hamel-Vaire woods. On August 9th, the 131st went into action again, this time as part of the 58th British Division, and launched a successful attack on Chippilly Ridge and the Gresaire wood. The valiant service performed by the 131st in this assignment led to a personal visit by King George of England on August 20th, 1918. The British Monarch personally decorated many of the officers and men of the Regiment.

Operating as a Division for the first time, the 33rd relieved a French division in the Blercourt area, southwest of Verdun, on September 10th, 1918. The units took part in the opening of the Meuse-Argonne offensive capturing the Bois-de-Forges and occupying the sector facing the Meuse River.

Beginning on October 8th, the Division participated in operations east of the Meuse River, remaining astride that stream until relieved on October 21st. The Division was in constant intensive action during that period.

Taking up front-line positions again on October 26th, the Gold Cross Division became a part of the Second Army, operating in the Troyan Sector. They assisted in driving the Germans from the towns of St. Hilaire and Marcheville and occupied the towns of Butgneville and Riaville. When the Armistice ended hostilities on November 11th, the 33rd was still advancing.

In the four campaigns participated in by the 33rd Division—Amiens, Verdun, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne—the division suffered 7,255 casualties and captured 2,987 prisoners. For its heroic efforts and sterling performance in World War I, the 33rd Division received a commendation from General John J. Pershing, Commander-in-Chief of the American Expeditionary Forces.

Following the First World War, the 33rd Division functioned as a National Guard unit, helping to maintain law and order, quelling riots and policing flooded areas. These veterans established numerous armories throughout Illinois where weekly drills and field exercise training were held. Once a year for a two-week period, the Division engaged in intensive training at Camp Grant, Illinois, and at Camp Custer, Michigan. A small arms school was held each year at Camp Logan. During this period the Gold Cross Division was commanded successively by Major Generals Milton J. Foreman, Roy D. Keehn, and Samuel T. Lawton.

HISTORY THIRTY-THIRD DIVISION

Following a proclamation issued by President Roosevelt on January 14, 1941, the 33rd Division was ordered into active Federal service on March 5th, 1941. On that day, cheered by thousands of Chicagoans as they marched down Michigan Boulevard and passed in review, the Division entrained for Camp Forrest, Tennessee, and arrived there on March 15th to immediately plunge into an intensive training program as part of the III Corps of the 2nd Army. In August and September of 1941, the 33rd participated in the maneuvers of the 2nd and 3rd Armies. As part of the 2nd Army forces during maneuvers, the Division served under the command of Lt. General Ben Lear.

On March 9th, 1942, the Division was assigned to Army Ground Forces and moved to Fort Lewis, Washington. Earlier, with the bombing of Pearl Harbor on December 7th, 1941, the 33rd had taken over duties of guarding vital war installations. In January, 1942, the Division had lost some of its units—the 132nd Infantry Regiment, the 2nd Battalion of the 123rd Field Artillery and the 108th Quartermaster Battalion. These units shipped overseas to become a part of the Americal Division then being organized in New Caledonia.

Also prior to the move to Fort Lewis, the Division had been triangularized. This was done in February and the revised lineup included three Infantry Regiments, 129th, 130th and 131st, with the addition of four artillery battalions, 122nd, 123rd, 124th and 210th. In March, 1942, the 131st Infantry was sent to guard the locks at Sault Ste. Marie and the 136th Infantry, composed of men from Illinois, Michigan and Texas, was formed to replace it.

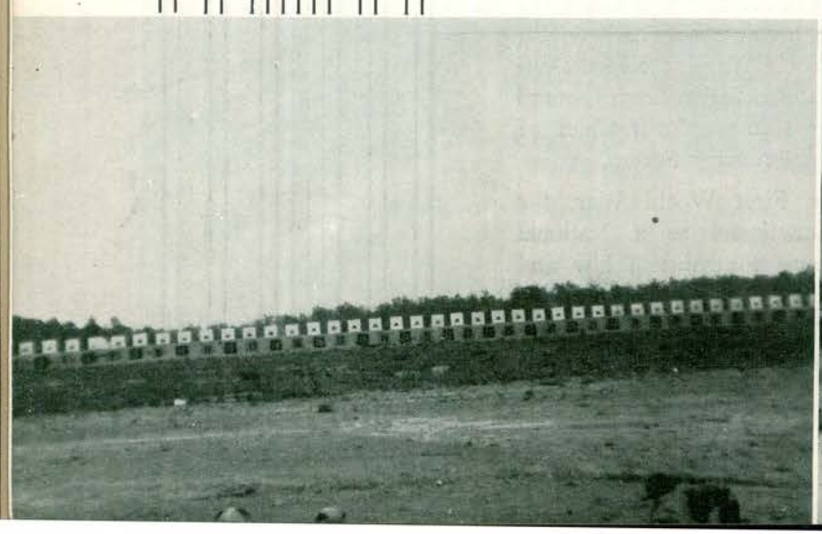

At the time the Division was inducted into Federal service, the 33rd was commanded by Major General Samuel T. Lawton, a Chicago attorney who had served with the Division in the First World War. Major General Frank B. Mahon replaced Lawton in May, 1942, but was in command only two months, being killed in an airplane crash. Major General John Millikin then assumed command.

In August, 1942, the Division lost another Regiment when the 129th was pulled out to become part of the 37th Division and the 123rd Infantry was activated on September 28th, one battalion of the 129th Infantry being retained as a nucleus with the remainder furnished by cadres from the other two Regiments and recruits from the Middle West.

After a period of training at Fort Lewis, the Division moved to the Mohave Desert in April, 1943. Brief maneuvers were carried out on the desert and the 33rd then embarked for overseas on July 5th. On arrival in the Hawaiian Islands, the Division was assigned to guarding vital installations with additional training also included. Part of the Division was stationed on Maui and part on Kauai. In October, 1943, Major General Percy W. Clarkson assumed command of the 33rd and he remained with the Division through its combat campaigns and during the Occupation of Japan up to the time the Division was inactivated early in 1946.

In May, 1944, the Division left the Hawaiian Islands and sailed for New Guinea, its first zone of combat operations. Camp was set up at Finschaven, Australian New Guinea. On August 20th, the 123rd Infantry Regiment, with attached artillery and other units, was sent to Maffin Bay in Dutch New Guinea. This special force set up perimeter defenses and engaged the enemy in the Wakde-Sarmi area. On December 24th, 1944, the other two Regiments jumped off for action in the Halmaheras. This group fought the Second Battle of Morotai.

Early in February of 1945, the Division was reassembled and left for the Philippines. The component units joined forces en route. Arriving at Lingayen Gulf on Luzon, the 33rd began action by helping to secure terrain in the Damortis-Rosario-Pozorrubio area. A push northward was then begun and three months of uphill fighting over the most rugged terrain on Luzon followed. The climax was reached when Baguio, summer capital of the Philippines, was captured. Baguio was the final objective of the campaign. Mopping up operations continued as late as July, 1945, as troops of the Division moved to break the San Nicholas-Tebbo-Itogan route. A special force was sent to Dingalan Bay, on the west side of Luzon during the campaign and the Division furnished leadership personnel for the force that captured Aparri on the northern tip of Luzon. After the capture of Baguio, components of the Division operated far north of that city and up the coast as far as Cervantes.

The 33rd was making intensive preparations for the invasion of the Japanese homeland when the welcome news of the armistice arrived. As part of I Corps, the 33rd was to form an assault spearhead with a landing at Miyazaki, on the east coast of Kyushu, early in November. With the necessary changes of plans due to Japan's surrender, the 33rd Division was assigned to occupation duty in the Kyoto-Kobe area of Honshu. The Division remained in that vicinity until inactivated early in February of 1946.

The 33rd Division rang up a glorious record in battle—its casualty rate was one of the lowest of any combat division in the war. For every American life lost, the Division took a toll of 26 tabulated enemy killed. Recent total casualties released by the War Department disclose that 699 men of the 33rd were killed in action, 3,493 were wounded in action and 136 were listed as missing. Total casualties added up to 4,328.

Three men of the Division were awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor, the highest award that the nation can bestow.

THE DIVISION SHOULDER PATCH

The shoulder patch of the 33rd Division is circular in shape and contains a gold cross on a field of black. Its origin is reputedly derived from the practice of one of the Regiments of the Division of marking its property with a yellow cross during the Moro campaign in which it was engaged. Yellow was a taboo color to the Mohammedans.

Ordered to mark its equipment with a distinctive Division insignia during the First World War, the 33rd used left-over yellow paint and, recalling the Moro campaign and the method of marking practiced by the Regiment there, adopted the familiar gold cross. The shoulder patch was later adopted from this marking.

BIRTH AND GROWTH

FORT LEWIS, WASHINGTON

FORT LEWIS, WASHINGTON...

Although the 33rd Infantry Division, parent organization of the 123rd Infantry Regiment, dates its entry into the war as a component part of the United States Army back to March 5th, 1941, the 123rd Infantry did not come into being until the Division was stationed at Fort Lewis, Washington. The Division, at that time, was depleted by having entire regiments transferred to other commands and an additional regiment was needed to triangularize it.

The 123rd Infantry Regiment was activated on September 28th, 1942. One battalion of the 129th Infantry, a Regiment of the Division which had been transferred to the 37th Division, was retained to form the nucleus of the newly-formed regiment. To fill out the other two battalions, cadres from the other remaining regiments of the Division, the 130th and 136th Infantries, and a goodly number of new inductees from the Middle West were received.

Lt. Colonel W. M. Spann (later promoted to full colonel) became the first commander of the 123rd Infantry but he remained in that capacity only a few months. Other members of the original staff included Major Thomas Spencer, 1st Lt. Norman Knapp and 1st Lt. John F. Costello. Spencer, the first executive officer of the regiment was later promoted to Lt. Col. and given command of the 2nd Battalion. Promoted to Captain, Knapp became adjutant of the 3rd Battalion. Costello, later promoted to Captain, was placed in command of Company K and led that unit through all of its combat campaigns.

Once organization was under way, the new Regiment began an intensive program of training. During the months that followed the men of the Regiment received such a diversified diet of training that they were amply equipped for combat in any theatre of war and in any section of the globe. Further specialized training received later made the Regiment one that compared favorably with any in the U. S. Army.

Soon after the Regiment took form as an integrated organization, many special schools were held to provide qualified men for all specialized assignments. In October of 1942 schools for motor workers, cooks, radiomen, buglers and messengers were held. The motor schools, separate sections for tuneup, maintenance and lubrication, were conducted by IX Corps. Cooks and bakers schools were also under the supervision of the Corps. The radio school was conducted by the Division and the buglers and messengers classes scheduled by the Regiment. In November the Regiment held special classes for supply sergeants and in December, Division conducted a wire school.

In January of 1934, the training of the men was formulated to employ them as members of units. Previously, they had gone through a thirteen weeks' schedule of basic Infantry training. The month of January, 1943 was devoted to platoon and company problems. During that month each battalion also trained and maintained a motorized patrol platoon and a drivers school was held to provide skilled vehicle operators.

Also in January, IX Corps gave physical proficiency tests. One platoon of each company (with the exception of battalion headquarters and the Medical detachment) was tested and a very satisfactory showing was made.

The month of February was devoted to combat firing problems employing Battalion Combat Teams and Regimental Combat Teams. During the period when the Regiment was stationed at Fort Lewis an extensive firing range program was carried out and during that period 90% of the enlisted personnel qualified with individual weapons and crew served pieces.

In March, the training was broadened to encompass tactical operations on a Divisional scale. These were field exercises for the most part. To round out the training that the Regiment received prior to its departure for the Mojave Desert, special schools in demolition, chemical warfare, intelligence, and anti-tank weapons were held. Many demonstrations were put on by Division, including employment of battalions in defense and attack.

In January of 1943, Colonel Paul C. Serff had taken over the command of the 123rd Infantry Regiment. A regular army officer who had graduated from West Point in 1923, Colonel Serff came to the Regiment with an excellent background in all aspects of Infantry operations. He remained with the Regiment for the balance of the war and with the Occupation Forces in Japan until the Regiment, along with the other elements of the Division, was demobilized in February, 1946. Colonel Serff led the Regiment through two rugged campaigns (New Guinea and Luzon) and the excellent performances in combat of each unit was a tribute to his training supervision and his sound tactics.

Fort Lewis, with its mud and rain, prepared the men of the 123rd for its future duty in the dank jungles of New Guinea; and the rugged Washington terrain provided a preview of later mountain fighting in the hills of Luzon. Early in April of 1943 the Regiment, along with the rest of the Division, pulled stakes and moved to the Mojave Desert.

MOJAVE DESERT...

As part of the 33rd Infantry Division the 123rd Infantry Regiment arrived on the Mojave Desert on April 4, 1943. The Regimental camp was set up near Goffs and Fenner at the California edge of the desert and the camp was named Camp Clipper, derived from the fact that the organization was bivouaced at the foothills of Clipper Mountain.

The 123rd, along with other components of the 33rd, gained the distinction of becoming the first Infantry troops to train on the desert without becoming motorized. Other Infantry divisions which had preceded the 33rd on desert training (including the 6th and 7th Divisions) had been converted to motorized Infantry with the personnel being transported on half track vehicles to the spot of combat and then fighting on foot. Thus, the 33rd Division was the pioneer in foot soldiering on desert terrain.

The units training on the desert were being groomed for combat in North Africa. At the time, War Department planners believed that the African Campaign would be a drawn out affair and many units were trained for action on the burning sands. With the exception of the armored forces, almost all of the desert trained troops ended up in the island-hopping campaigns of the Pacific.

All of the units of the Regiment took part in individual and small unit training while on the desert. Emphasis was placed on special situations imposed by desert terrain, its torrid heat, lack of cover, and scarcity of water. The men underwent physical hardening training. They became adept at the construction and use of hasty entrenchments, including foxholes designed to protect from rampaging tanks. Dispersion was stressed in all of the training and water discipline was rigidly enforced. It took a lot of ingenuity to wash clothes and still have enough water to drink from the meager portions meted out.

The major part of the special training on the desert was designed to indoctrinate the men for combat in areas where enemy tanks were used in abundance. Also included in the training were action against armored vehicles, exercises in tank hunting and practice in the laying, detection, disarming and removal of mine fields and booby traps.

The desert, hot as blazes in the daytime and often quite chilly after nightfall, was not a place to charm the average person. True, the sunsets were often radiant and the clear nights, with an amazingly brilliant canopy of stars overhead, had a certain appeal but all such things were offset by the non-tactical ten-mile hikes across country. Each company held a ten-mile hike each week for a period of a month Overnight bivouacs were conducted as part of the march training. Light and sound discipline, so necessary in barren terrain, were emphasized.

Along with the general training that was given to all men, a good deal of specialized training was conducted. Anti-Tank Company engaged in gun drills and received instruction in the demolition of abandoned ordnance equipment. They also constructed gun emplacements and were schooled in the art of camouflage.

A realistic touch was added to the training in the form of platoon leadership tests. Every platoon in the Regiment covered a pre-determined advancement course laid out to cover both desert terrain and adjacent mountain country, a maneuver which extended for five days. The Intelligence and Reconnaissance Platoon of the Regiment acted as the enemy force in these problems and they harassed the platoons each night. Supply problems had to be solved as part of these maneuvers. Camouflage schools and dead reckoning navigation courses supplemented the special training.

Target ranges were constructed and special firing courses were added to the regular range firing. All units of the Regiment participated in the firing of transition, infiltration, and close combat courses. Regular range firing was scheduled in order to complete qualifications in the carbine and rifle.

The Regiment spent less than three months on the Mojave Desert. When the scope of training that was crammed into the schedule during that brief period is considered, the men really had a busy time. Thus, when orders to move to Camp Stoneman arrived, the news was welcomed as the best to come in quite a while. Here at last seemed to be an end to training and a beginning of action.

Leaving the desert, the Regiment joined other components of the 33rd Division and arrived at Camp Stoneman, located on the fringe of San Francisco, on June 22, 1943. Between the date of arrival at that post and July 7th, when the troops boarded ship bound for the Hawaiian Islands, further polishing up training was accomplished. The men ran obstacle courses, fired on the known range and participated in deck debarkation drills. Battalions and separate units took twelve-mile hikes, and orientation of the Pacific Theatre rounded out the final training in the states. The 123rd felt it was ready for duty overseas.

PORT OF EMBARKATION

The sojourn on the Mohave Desert was comparatively short for the 123rd Infantry. After spending a little more than 10 weeks on the burning sands, the Regiment pulled stakes and moved to Camp Stoneman, just outside of San Francisco. Arriving at Camp Stoneman, the Port of Embarkation for Pacific-bound troops, on June 21st, 1943, the Regiment began final preparations for the move overseas. Necessary equipment was secured, final inspections were held, inoculations were given the men, and the ships were loaded. "We are moving one step closer to the enemy," was the term used with great frequency by the Commanding General of the Division during this period.

During the stay at Camp Stoneman the men were put through all of the various orientation courses designed for overseas-bound troops and were given last-minute specialized training to fit them for fighting service in the South Pacific.

An advance detail left by air a week in advance of the troops in order that proper billeting and other arrangements might be complete by the time the troops arrived. The Regiment boarded the Brazil, a former South American tourist cruiser which had been converted for use as a troop carrier, on July 7th and six days later the ship arrived in the Hawaiian Islands. After a brief stop at Honolulu, the Regiment moved on to Kauai, another island in the Hawaiian group located 90 miles from Oahu, to take up island defense duty and further combat training.

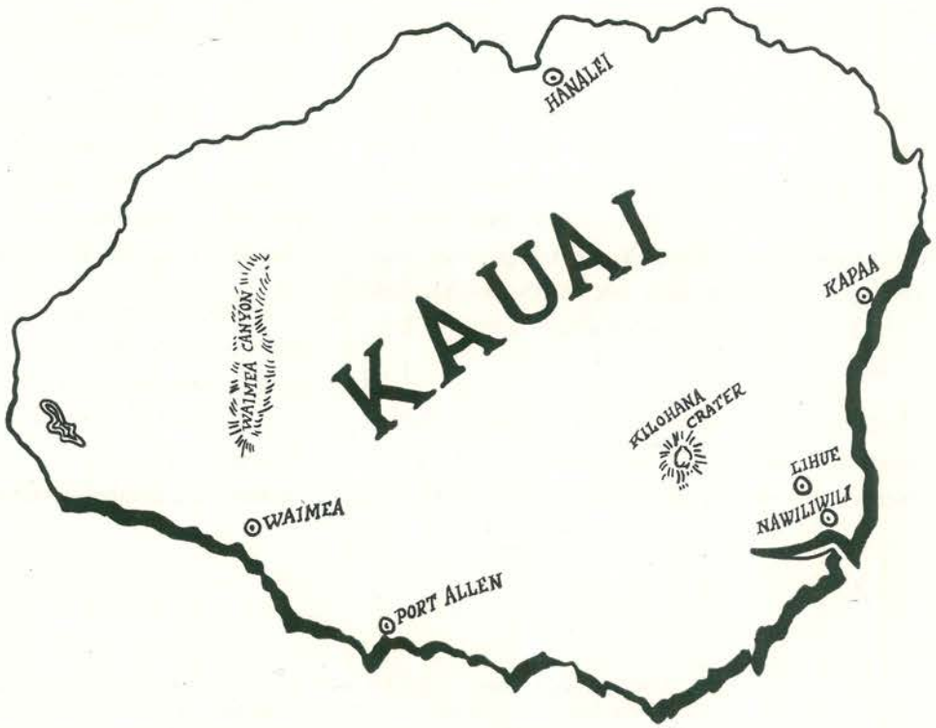

One of the traditions growing up around the first ocean trip of the Regiment centers around Mr. Galloway. The unfortunate Mr. Galloway, a Navy Lieutenant, will never realize the lasting memory he achieved during the trip, ending when he tied the Brazil to the docks in Honolulu one bright Sunday morning. "Mr. Galloway—dammit, Mr. Galloway, pull up your slack! Pul-ll-eeease, Mr. Galloway," were the often-heard words of the captain which came to be echoed and re-echoed all through the war.

KAUAI, HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

KAUAI . . . HAWAIIAN ISLANDS

Arriving in the Hawaiian Islands, the 33rd Division was split up. The 123rd Infantry was assigned to the Island of Kauai, called the "Garden Island." It was a beautiful and picturesque spot, with high hills, long stretches of sand dunes, and a canyon that rivals the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone. The Regiment arrived at Kauai on July 13th, 1943 and was destined for a nine months' tour of duty on the island.

One of the missions of the Regiment was to provide security for Kauai. More than a hundred concrete pill-boxes dotted the long shore line and these were manned by units of the 123rd. Along with the tactical mission, training again became the bane of existence for the men.

The move to the Pacific, where tactics, different than in any other place in the world were necessary, made it imperative that further training in amphibious warfare and jungle fighting be given.

The men of the Regiment had felt a certain elation when they left for overseas. They were sure that intensive training was now a thing of the past and that a taste of action was in the offing. They were doomed to disappointment. In fact, at one stage of the duty tour on Kauai the principle employment of the troops was pineapple harvesting, a necessary task but hardly one to challenge the talents of men who had trained hard and long for combat duty.

Many problems were worked into the schedule. Night exercises were stressed and five-day platoon and three-day squad problems were put on the roster. There were also many schools for special training including courses in map reading, radio, chemical warfare, demolitions, flame throwing and intelligence. Special instruction was given to all men to prepare them for living in the jungle and to educate them in malaria control.

The highlight of the early training on Kauai came with the "Priggy Trail" operation, a tactical exercise conducted in the rugged sections of the island. This proved to be excellent training for future jungle warfare and especially for mountain campaigning on Luzon.

The 123rd Infantry had relieved the 40th Division as Kauai's defense force and the Battalions rotated in assignment to the various sectors of the Island. Camps were set up at Barking Sands and at Wialiu with one Battalion usually engaged in training activities.

Ranger training was important for Pacific combat so a number of men were selected to attend the widely heralded Jungle School conducted by the Hawaiian Department on Oahu. When these men returned after successfully completing the gruelling course, they were used to train the other men of the Regiment. A Ranger school was set up and all men received a month of diversified training in commando tactics and jungle warfare.

Climaxing the tour of duty on Kauai, the men were put through their paces on the ship nets used for embarkation and debarkation. Practice in boarding landing craft and debarkation for assault drills, using small landing craft, followed. To culminate a week of intensive training in all phases of amphibious operations, each battalion carried out a realistic landing exercise. Preceded by commando units which landed two hours before the first wave of assault troops, the battalions made beach landings, blew up barb wire beach defenses with bangalor torpedoes and then reorganized and advanced inland.

Also included in the training on Kauai were practice in assaulting fortified positions, the establishment of beachheads, the movement of equipment and supplies (vital to the success of any landing) and operations of a battalion over rugged terrain using limited transportation.

Following the period of amphibious training, a two-week period was spent in combined tank and infantry tactics. Using a company of tanks, each battalion received training in the methods of supporting tanks, how to advance with the assistance of tanks and how to best employ the tank-infantry team in combined operations. Due to the nature of Pacific island warfare, where tanks could be used only in limited degree, this was one phase of the training that was not put to any extensive use later.

The Regiment's tour of duty on Kauai, which was United States territory and which was quite close to American civilization and its many conveniences, was a pleasant one. The men had ample free time to visit the towns and scenic spots on the island and some men were privileged to spend a week on Niahau, the forbidden island a short distance from Kauai. Some of the more fortunate individuals were granted passes for a week in Honolulu.

Trained to the point of near perfection, the Regiment was on the edge of going stale. Other Divisions and Regiments were committed to action but the 123rd, along with the rest of the Division, seemed doomed for duties of an occupational nature. One cannot say that any soldier in World War II was really itching for battle but the general feeling was that as long as we were in the army we ought to get into the fray and help to finish it in a hurry. The long-awaited day-orders to sail farther west finally arrived and the Division was assembled to move to New Guinea, which was then the outermost fringe of America's combat forces. The Regiment embarked on the Matsonia at Pearl Harbor, joined the Division convoy and set sail for New Guinea on April 25th, 1944.

BRIEF HISTORY OF KAUAI

Kauai, called the "Garden Island" of the Hawaiian group is of historical importance because it is the first of the group to have been discovered by the outside world. One morning in January of 1778, Captain James Cook, the famed British navigator and explorer found himself gazing at Kauai's lovely shoreline. Cook named the group the Sandwich Islands in honor of his patron, the Earl of Sandwich, First Lord Admiral of the British Admiralty.

One of Cook's captains, Captain Bligh, master of the Resolution, later gained lasting fame following the historic mutiny aboard his ship the Bounty. Captain Cook was well received on the island and he later met the great chief of the islands, King Kamehameha I, a great leader who became known as "Napoleon of the Pacific." This great leader, who unified the islands, died in 1818 and was succeeded by his son Liholiho.

The first explorers to reach Kauai and the Hawaiian Islands brought tales of the charm and hospitality of the islands to the ports of Europe and America. Soon the islands became the center of a brisk trade that extended from India and Europe to the Americas and Alaska. One Spaniard, Don Francisco Marin, called Marini by the islanders, was an agriculturist and with the assistance of visiting skippers who brought seeds and cuttings, he introduced many new plants.

In 1819, the Russians arrived in the Hawaiian Islands and, supported by a battery of guns, the flag of Imperial Russia flew over Honolulu. The Russians also invaded Kauai and the spot where they landed and set up their blockhouse fort can still be seen.

The dynasty of the islands, set up by Kamehameha in 1790 continued until the line of descent became extinct in 1873. Christianity was introduced in 1820. After the deposition of Queen Liliuokalani in 1893, a provisional government was set up. After an unsuccessful attempt to become annexed to the United States a Republic was established with Sanford B. Dole as president. The islands were finally annexed in 1898 and in 1900, Hawaii was made a territory.

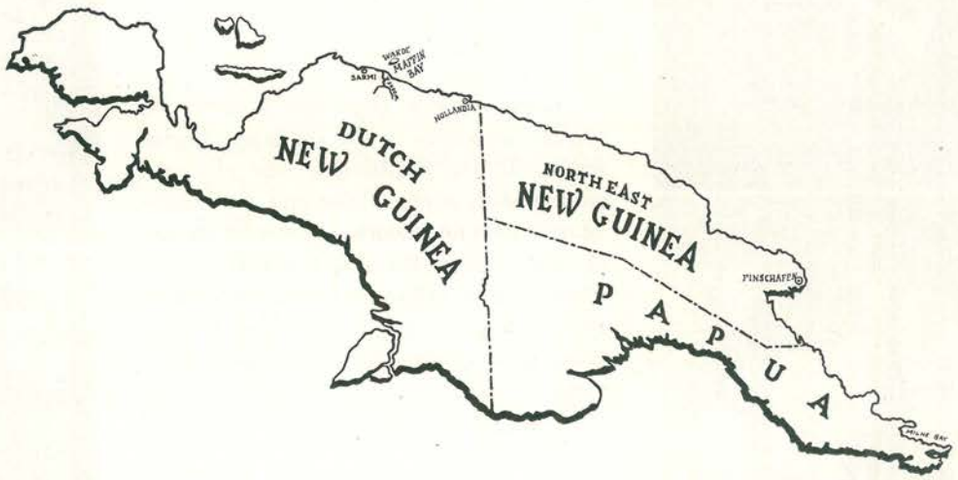

Kauai, the most beautiful island in the Hawaiian group, is the fourth largest. It covers 547 square miles in area and has a population of 35,806. Memorable places include the mountain mass of Waileale (where the second heaviest rainfall area in the world is found, Waimea Canyon, which is a miniature Grand Canyon in splendor and beauty, and Barking Sands, where legend says you can hear the sands bark at the proper season. Principal towns of Kauai are Lihue and Waimea—the former is the county seat and the latter the old capital and the first place visited by Captain Cook. Fields of sugar, rice and pineapples cover the island.

The island of Niihau, forbidden to most outsiders, contains the remnants of the pure Hawaiian race. Niihau is just off Kauai, covers 97 square miles and has a population of 136. Many of the men in the 123rd had the rare privilege of spending a week on this secluded place.

Kauai and Niihau, as part of the Hawaiian Islands, are now being considered as a possible 49th state of the union.

CROSSING THE EQUATOR

En route to New Guinea, troops of the Regiment observed the crossing of the Equator with appropriate ceremonies during which the men were officially inducted into the Mystic Order of the Deep. Troops aboard the Matsonia observed the ceremonies on April 28th, 1944.

Major Ralph Pate, a veteran of Equator crossings, served as King Neptune with Lieutenant John Atkinson holding court as his queen. The role of the royal baby was filled by Lieutenant Hartwell Blake. The court was complete with court jesters, court magician, an array of attendants and a host of pirates—all of them in gala costumes.

Shown on this page are a series of typical sequences in the initiation, beginning with the impromptu hair clip and ending with a crawl through an improvised tunnel into which a powerful stream of water from the ship's fire hose was played. All rebellious subjects were taken before Neptune and after being quickly tried were given further rigorous treatment.

King Neptune and his entire court are shown in the picture in the center of the right column. Most of the men aboard were crossing the earth's center for the first time so the King and his staff had a busy afternoon. Following the initiations, all men were issued cards to signify their membership in the Mystic Order of the Deep.

As the warm tropical sun dipped into the ocean and slowly faded to denote the end of day, King Neptune could number a few thousand more subjects to swell the rolls of the world's largest fraternity.

NEW GUINEA CAMPAIGN...

The 33rd Division landed at Finschaven, Australian New Guinea, on May 11th, 1944 and the units were spread out in bivouac areas. The 123rd set up camp about twelve miles up the coast. New Guinea, with its almost year-round rains, provided a camp location with plenty of water and plenty of mud. The pattern of earlier duty continued to dog the footsteps of the Regiment and the principle duty for a time was the unloading of cargo ships. There was a backlog of more than 50 ships for unloading at Finschaven and with service troops in the area almost negligible, manpower was necessary. Bringing cargo ashore wasn't the kind of a task the men relished but they set up an impressive record in clearing the ship holds. Polishing up continued in tactics and added emphasis was placed on landing team training.

On August 20th, 1944, the 123rd Infantry was detached from the rest of the Division and was sent up the coast to Dutch New Guinea for employment against the Japanese forces in the Toem-Sarmi sector of Maffin Bay. Arriving at Maffin Bay on September 1st, the Regiment relieved an entire division (the 31st) for operations as Tornado Task Force. General Meyers, Assistant Division Commander, was put in command of the area.

The mission of the 123rd was to insure full operation of Wakde airdrome, recently captured by American forces, and to maintain security in the area, which had many supply and ammunition dumps. The Regiment had to maintain a lengthy strip of perimeter pillboxes and had to patrol aggressively to prevent the movement in numbers of Japanese troops which were located four miles up the coast. Due to the small number of men available for duty, as compared to the preceding task force of a full division, the perimeter had to be pulled in.

One battalion was assigned to Rocky Point and one battalion was located in the Toem area. The perimeter was cut into two segments with a several mile space of scantily protected area between them. This made possible a maximum of protection with a minimum of troops.

During the stay at Maffin Bay, the Regiment had another important mission, that of loading two task forces for operations farther west. Many commendations were received for making these forces ready in record time.

Every rifle company went out on at least one five-day patrol and in addition there were smaller one and two-day patrols in constant operation. Under Tornado Task Force, 88 one-day patrols and 8 two-day patrols were sent out. When the Regiment reverted to its status as a Regimental Combat Team, 258 one-day patrols and 29 patrols of two-day duration were conducted, these in addition to the score or more of five-day patrols.

Resistance from the Japanese was encountered on many occasions and on each of these the Japs were rendered ineffective. By the use of these patrols, the Japs were prevented from closing in on the perimeter and their guns were kept out of range. The troops, tasting their first combat, showed the results of excellent training and they acquitted themselves credibly on every occasion.

At the time the 123rd took over the Toem-Sarmi area there were an estimated 2,000 Japanese in the area with 1,400 of them designated as combat troops. When the Regiment left the area for combat on Luzon, the total number of Japs killed in that sector, including those accounted for by preceding troops, had been swelled to 4,005.

The most bitter battle of the Sarmi area took place when Company C, led by Captain Marchant, ran into strong resistance at Sawar Drome. When this patrol started out many of the men remarked, "Won't it be hell if we don't run into anything." They didn't have to wait long. On the second morning of their five-day patrol they were greeted by a burst of enemy shells, some of them dropping within 15 yards of the spot where the patrol was concentrated. The next day the patrol ran into machine gun fire after a day spent in slogging through the deep mud of the Sago palm swamps. Four Nip patrols were surprised and five of the enemy killed. That, however, was just a warm-up for the real battle which took place the next day.

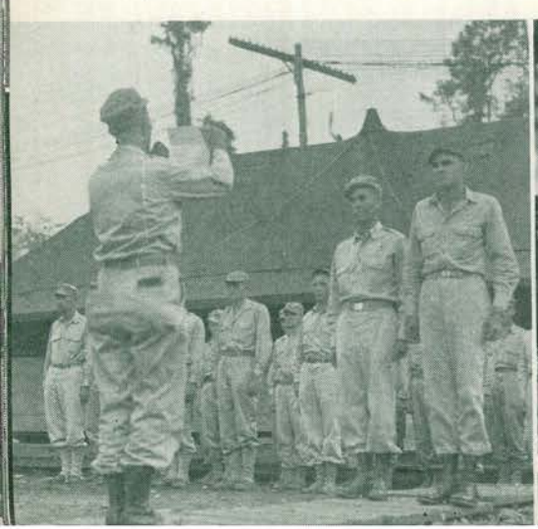

Three enemy tanks had infiltrated behind Company C's lines and Jap mortar and machine gun fire backed up the tanks. In the battle that followed, an all day long skirmish, three enemy tanks were knocked out, one of them by a well-aimed bazooka shot fired by Captain Marchant, and 25 Japs were strewn around the brush to bring the total bag of the patrol to 31 verified enemy dead. Only one member of the patrol was killed by an aerial bomb booby trap on the first day.

Accompanying the activities of the Regiment at Maffin Bay were several historical sidelights. Sergeant Victor Highsmith became the first man in the Regiment to be awarded a combat medal, the Bronze Star. Sergeant Winfield Green, later commissioned, was the first winner of a Silver Star Medal. Lt. Walter Roper, gallantly leading a patrol deep in enemy territory was the first man in the Regiment (and the first in the Division) to lose his life in combat. Corporal Roy Adams of the Regimental Intelligence and Reconnaissance Platoon was credited with being the first member of the Regiment to kill a Jap. First men in the Division to receive Purple Hearts were with the Maffin Bay force.

Its mission fulfilled, the 123rd Infantry was relieved by elements of the 93rd Division. As the area was to be eventually abandoned all strategic materials and constructions were destroyed. The Regiment left Maffin Bay on January 26th, 1945, joined other elements of the Division en route, and departed for Luzon in the Philippines.

BRIEF HISTORY OF NEW GUINEA

With the single exception of Australia, which ranks as a continent, New Guinea is the largest island in the Pacific. Among the islands of the world, it ranks second being surpassed in size only by Greenland. In spite of its potential wealth in minerals and products of cultivation, New Guinea was almost completely outside the domain of civilization until comparatively recent times.

The Portuguese explorer, Jorge de Menzes, is credited with the discovery of New Guinea. He traversed that area in 1526 or 1527. It was not until 1606, however, that the insularity of the island was discovered by the Spanish pilot Torres. This discovery was carefully concealed as a state secret of Spain, being tucked away in the archives at Manila to be finally forgotten by the Spanish themselves.

A century and a half later the territory was discovered all over again by the British. Captain Cook's expedition opened an era of modern exploration of New Guinea participated in by the British, Dutch and French. The Dutch were the first to attempt occupation and in 1828 that government officially proclaimed possession of the western part of the island—as far east as longtitude 141. No other attempts at occupation were made until comparatively recent times. After Fiji had been ceded to the British crown in 1874, agitation began in Australia with proposals that control of eastern New Guinea be secured.

Nothing further was done until the close of the year 1877, when the reported discovery of gold in New Guinea attracted a great many Australian gold diggers to the island. By 1883, the Queensland government's agent at Port Moresby had assumed the role as an administrator, and on April 4th of that year, the Queensland government formally took possession of New Guinea. Three years later an agreement on boundaries between eastern and western New Guinea was reached with Germany. In 1906, the British territory was renamed Papua and at the close of the First World War, all of New Guinea held by Germany was mandated to Australia. Australian soldiers had occupied King Wilhelmsland, the German portion of the island in 1914.

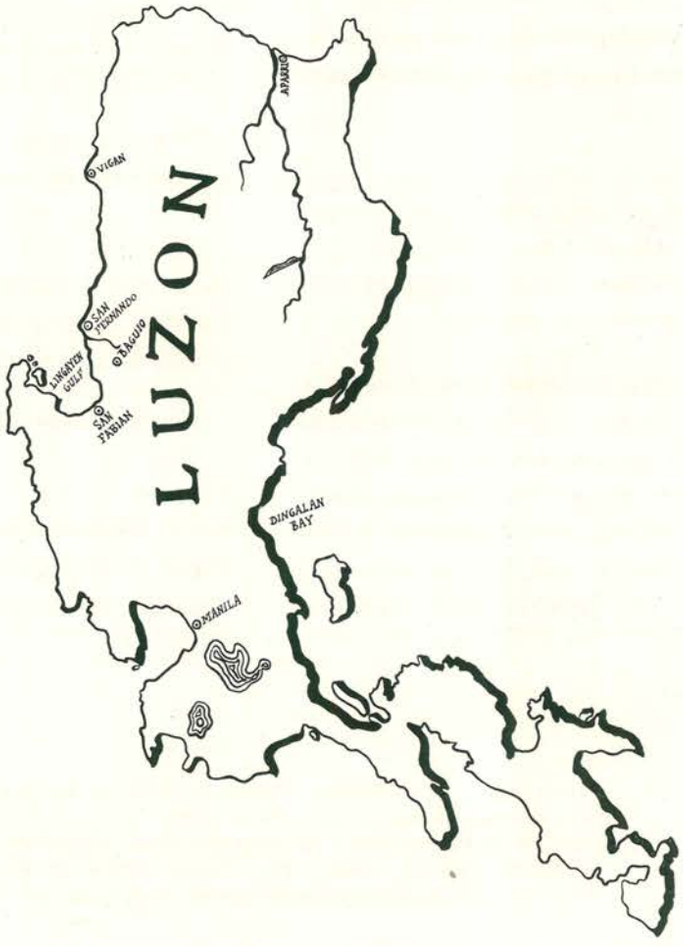

Early in 1942, the Japanese invaded both the Dutch and Australian portions of New Guinea. The Nips intended to use that island as a possible jumping-off-place for an invasion of Australia. All areas of New Guinea that were suitable for air strips were quickly taken over. By July, American and Australian troops had launched counter offensives and at the time the 123rd Infantry landed at Maffin Bay, the New Guinea Japs had been cut off from all outside reinforcements.

In area, New Guinea is equal to one and a half times that of France. From its northwestern to its southeastern extremities it stretches for nearly 1500 miles. The territory of New Guinea (including the Bismarck Archipelago and the former German Solomon Islands) has a native population of 6,498. In the island itself, Papua has an estimated population of natives totaling 338,822 and the other two seconds have populations almost as high.

New Guinea is rich in the products of trade—crude rubber, coconuts, sisal hemp, gold and silver. In cultivated areas, rice, tea, coffee, spices, corn and tobacco are grown. The swamps that dominate New Guinea make it the most unhealthy place in the world for white men.

LUZON, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

LUZON CAMPAIGN...

The 123rd Infantry Regiment landed at Lingayan Gulf on Luzon in the Philippines on February 10th, 1945. A temporary camp was set up in the rice paddies near San Fabian. Three days later the units of the 123rd moved forward to take over front lines occupied by troops of the 158th Regimental Combat Team. At 11 A.M. of February 13th, all three battalions had taken over their frontal sectors. The Command Post was set up at Damortis.

First shots fired by the 33rd Division on Luzon were by Cannon Company of the 123rd. In the operations which immediately followed the M-7's on Cannon Company inflicted heavy losses on the Japanese.

The first company to send out a patrol was Company B. This patrol started out on February 18th and returned on the 24th. Strong enemy positions were encountered, making it necessary for the patrol to by-pass the area to reach its objective.

The first man to kill a Jap on Luzon was Pfc. Fay "Tex" Hough, a medical aid man who was attached to Company C. He was attending a wounded man on the front when a Nip popped up a short distance away. Hough finished off the Nip and then completed his aid work.

The First Battalion moved to Rosario and from there advanced up the highway to the foothills of Twin Peaks on the Kennon Road. Given the task of capturing the rugged peaks, two companies advanced up the slopes. Nearing their objectives, heavy opposition was encountered from well-concealed Jap emplacements and the companies had to hold their positions. The Japanese were making a valiant defense of this area as it controlled the last water points on the routes leading to Baguio. The companies were later relieved by a substantially larger force and the Japs pulled out over the mountains. Intelligence reports later disclosed that an entire Japanese battalion had been operating against Company A.

Moving by night, the First Battalion arrived at San Luis near Pugo. Company B had previously sent a patrol to secure the town. An interesting incident occurred at this time. Lt. Merle Fleenor was given the task of laying telephone wire as soon as the town had been secured. He and his crew arrived at the place and found nobody there. He thought that the patrol had gone through the village and was advancing beyond. He installed his phones and was calling back to headquarters when the patrol arrived. Fleenor and his two wire section men had arrived ahead of the patrol and had taken over.

From San Luis the Battalion made a night advance through the valley and started up the slopes of three peaks. The first peak was captured 50 minutes after the ascent began and by noon the other two had been taken and occupied. Not a single man was wounded or killed. The Battalion Commander then directed his supporting tanks to advance up the valley to take two villages farther along.

The Second Battalion worked up the other flank of Pugo to take the high ground between Damortis and Rosario. The day that the First Battalion took the three peaks, the Second Battalion took strategic high ground just beyond Pugo. The Regimental Command Post was moved to Pugo and troops of the Regiment went into bivouac in that area. The Third Battalion operated along the coast towards San Fernando.

After a short reorganization period, the push through the mountains towards Baguio began. The second Battalion took up the front, pushing towards Mount Calugong and Mount Santo Tomas. The going was rough and roads had to be constructed to move supplies. The bulldozers worked right behind the advancing troops and were never more than 500 yards behind the fighting front. Hills 3,000 and 4,980 were captured by steady and rugged pushing. In thirty days of campaigning, the front advanced 13 miles with Baguio, the ultimate objective still 7 miles away.

The Third Battalion took over the front and pushed over the highest point on the route, almost 5,000 feet above sea level. During the advance up the mountains, units of the Second Battalion had executed a brilliant night operation to capture strategic points on the route of advance. This night attack was so well carried out that the Japs were unaware of the fact that their strongly entrenched emplacements had been occupied and at daybreak the Nips were mowed down in great numbers as they emerged from their caves on the reverse side of the hill to man their positions.

In the fight to the highest point of terrain, Company K executed a well-coordinated attack after first having an artillery barrage laid down less than a hundred yards to the front. Timed to perfection, the assault which immediately followed the lifting of the barrage, caught the Nips in their foxholes and the victory was achieved without casualties.

The first Battalion had gone into reserve for I Corps with a camp at Sison. They returned to the campaign with a drive near Galiano. Here the Japs offered stubborn resistance as they sought to defend the highway approaches to the Nagilian Road, the mountain highway leading directly into Baguio. Jap mountain artillery shelled this battalion constantly for several days. Several attempts to take high ground were repulsed. Finally the enemy's hump was broken and the final dash toward Baguio begun.

During the rugged mountain campaign from Pugo towards Baguio, two companies of the Regiment performed in such an outstanding manner that they were awarded unit citations. Companies F and G received the special awards.

The final race for Baguio was staged by the 37th and 33rd Divisions. The 37th Division, supporting the 33rd on the left flank, reached the cemetery at the edge of Baguio's city limits and a bitter struggle took place. In the meantime, the 33rd was striking from other tangents. The 123rd switched its strategy by discontinuing the advance over the mountains and advancing down the valley towards Tuba, on the route to Baguio.

Company G was sent off towards Mount Santo Tomas to protect that flank. During the campaign this company distinguished itself by wiping out entire Japanese companies on two occasions. Nearing Baguio, the Third Battalion reached the brushy country near Baguio and cleared the way in that sector. The boys named the area Times Square as there was a good bit of traffic through the area including Japanese tanks.

In the race for Baguio, it was rumored that the 33rd and the 37th Divisions erected road blocks to slow up the progress of the other. A patrol of Company C of the 123rd Infantry was the first to enter Baguio but the final glory of taking the Summer Capital of the Philippines was divided between the two divisions.

Baguio was heavily bombed before the troops moved in. The Regiment approached from the vicinity of Monastery

Hill and Observatory Hill and the once beautiful city was a mass of rubble. The remaining Japs, including their commander General Yamoshita, had fled northward to the vicinity of Bontoc.

In Baguio, the Regiment set up camp and some of the units moved farther to the North. The Third Battalion advanced to Trinidad and set up its headquarters there. Later, the First Battalion moved up the coast to the vicinity of Camp Spencer where they provided security for Guerilla forces advancing towards Bontoc.

Prior to the final dash towards Baguio, Company A was designated as a special task force and sent to Dingalen Bay on the far side of Luzon to act as a security force for the installations there. This force was commanded by Major Connolly and was called the "Connolly Task Force" A member of this force, Pfc. John McKinney, staged a one-man war and killed 39 Japs in a half hour battle. He was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

The 123rd also shares the glory for the capture of Aparri, the northernmost town on Luzon. The force which journeyed up the coast by motor caravan to capture that city was commanded by Major Connolly with Captain Whiteside as the executive, both members of the Regiment.

The Luzon Campaign was a tribute to the men of the Regiment. At one time the front extended for 64 miles and the entire campaign was fought over the most difficult terrain that troops anywhere ever fought over. The record of low casualties suffered by the Regiment is also a tribute to the leadership and the training of the men.

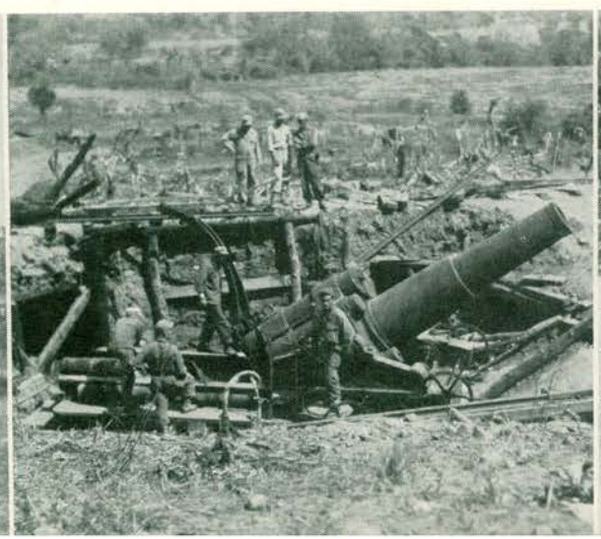

Heroes during this campaign were too numerous to cite individually. A great many men were awarded medals and many commendations were received. The supporting troops, including medical units, engineers and artillery all effectively combined into a smooth working organization which utilized its every weapon to achieve a brilliant campaign record.

The medics, especially, deserve the highest praise. They were always much in evidence in the spots of greatest danger, caring for the wounded and aiding the sick. Many of them received medal awards but many more deserve high tribute.

With the end of the Luzon Campaign, quotas for return to the states were increasing and with the cessation of hostilities the Regiment rapidly began to lose its veterans.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE PHILIPPINES

The Philippine Islands were known to the Chinese as early as the 10th Century. Before that time migratory peoples from the Malay Peninsula, Java, and other lands to the southwest had reached the islands in considerable numbers. The modern history of the islands dates back to March 16th, 1521, when Ferdinand Magellan stopped at Samar during his epoch-making trip around the world. He was killed a month later on the island of Mactan, near Cebu.

In 1565, Miguel Lopez de Legazpi led a colonizing expedition from Mexico and by 1571, Manila had been taken and a Spanish government set up. The islands were named Islas Filipinos in honor of King Philip II of Spain. Conquest of the northern islands was rapid but the Moros in the south fought spasmodically well on into the middle of the 19th Century.

Francis Drake, the English navigator, touched at the Philippines in 1577 and 20 years later the Dutch attempted to establish footholds on the islands. The Spaniards defeated a Dutch fleet near Manila in 1610. On October 5th, 1762, a British expedition captured Manila but under the Treaty of Paris in 1763, the city was restored to Spain. During the years 1809 to 1814 foreign trading depots were established.

On August 26th, 1896, under the leadership of Emilio Aguinaldo, the Filipinos launched an insurrection. The revolt was subdued only to flare up anew and the natives were at war with Spain when the Spanish-American War broke out.

Commodore George Dewey, with a small squadron of U. S. warcraft, defeated a Spanish squadron in Manila Bay on May 1st, 1898. On December 10th of the same year the islands were ceded to the United States. On February 4th, 1899, the Filipinos launched a war on American forces and it was not until April 16th, 1902, that the last stronghold on Samar surrendered. Further time was needed to quell the southern Moros.

Under American control the islands prospered and greater degrees of independence were progressively established. In 1913, free trade between the U.S. and the Philippines was established. In 1934, President Roosevelt signed the Tydings-McDuffie Independence Act under the terms of which the Philippines were to receive full independence in 1945. In 1935, Manual Quezon became the first President of the islands and he served until his death, late in the present war. On July 4th of 1946, the Philippines became completely independent. Manual Roxas was elected president to succeed Osmana, who had assumed office on the death of Quezon.

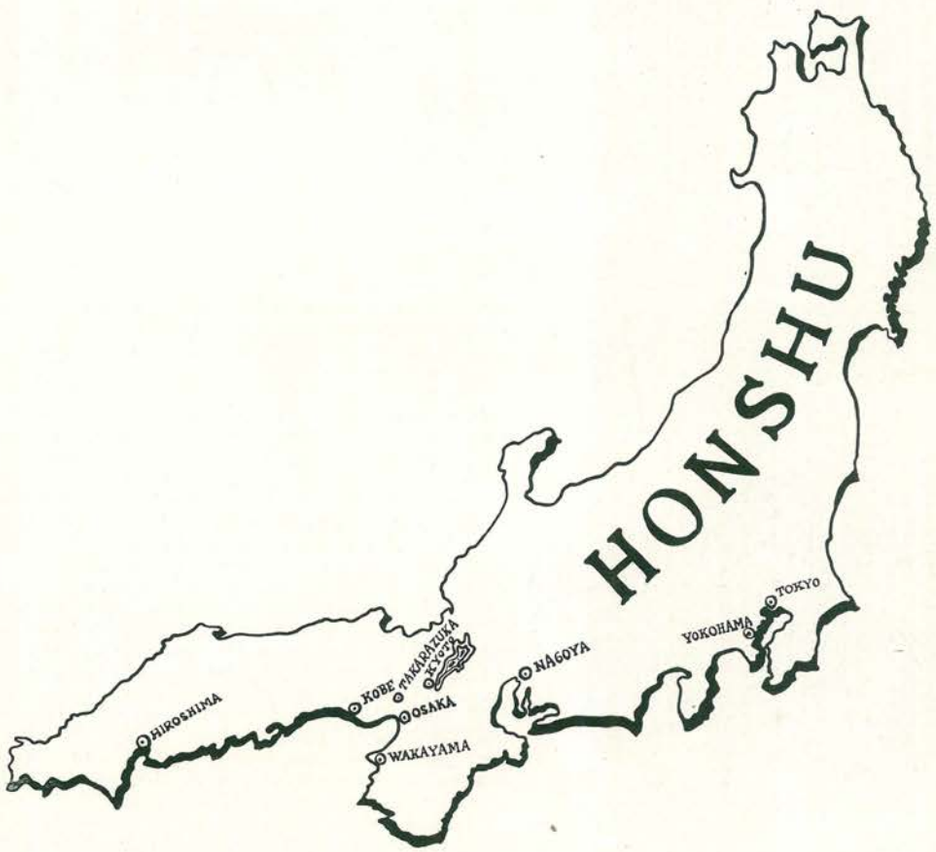

Since 1913, English has been the official language but many native dialects as well as Spanish are still in common use. A few years ago Tagalog was adopted as the national tongue.

The total number of islands in the Philippines is 7,083, eleven of them having an area of more than 1,000 square miles. The total area of the islands is 114,400 square miles. In 1940, the population was 16,003,303.

The area through which the 123rd fought in the present war, Lingayen to Baguio, is the area commanded by General Wainwright during the grim defense of the Philippines at the outbreak of World War II.

OCCUPATION OF JAPAN

OCCUPATION OF JAPAN

With the long hoped for announcement of the surrender of Japan in August, 1945, troops of the Regiment were hastily given altered plans in preparation for occupation duty on Japan's home island of Honshu. An intensive orientation program on Japan was added to the tactical training.

On September 20th, the Regiment embarked for Japan with main elements making the move in APA ships. The George Clymer carried Regimental Headquarters, the Ballinger carried the First Battalion, the Lander carried the Second Battalion and the Griggs carried the Third Battalion.

The Regiment's Cannon Company made the trip on an LST due to the special needs for transporting their tanks, and Service Company boarded the AKA Dulpin for the journey. One liberty ship, the Charles Piez, accompanied the troop ships as a cargo vessel.

A rear eschelon group was left behind at Bauang to convoy vehicles and supplies not urgently needed by the main body of troops. This group left the Philippines from Aringay Beach on Luzon on October 17th and arrived at Wakayama, Honshu, Japan, on the 23rd of October.

The tactical units of the Regiment landed at Wakayama, Honshu, on September 25th and immediately boarded trains bound for Takarazuka where the Regimental Headquarters were set up. Wakayama, the landing site, was the prewar lacquerwear center of Japan but the town had been completely leveled by a two-hour fire-bomb raid by American B-29's. Takarazuka, the Regiment's headquarters, was world famed as an opera center. A portion of the occupation troops were moved by motor trucks.

The First Battalion was quartered in buildings of the opera house, adjoining the main buildings used for Regimental Headquarters. The Second Battalion was stationed at Isoshi and the Third Battalion established its headquarters at Nishinomiya. Special units were garrisoned in buildings three blocks away from the Regimental Command Post.

Prior to the arrival of the Regiment at Takarazuka, Lt. Col. James Hilton, the Regiment's Executive Officer, who had arrived with the advance detail of the 33rd Division, found 200 Japanese Naval personnel in the town and had dispatched them to their homes.

The move into Takarazuka was made in orderly fashion. There were no demonstrations by the native civilians except for the hordes of children which lined the highways to shout Hello's to the soldiers. Civil and military authorities gave full cooperation and there were no apparent attempts to evade or violate the terms of surrender.

Upon assuming its sector of occupation, the Regiment's main duties were to patrol the area, to make tactical reconnaissances to confiscate weapons and to perform interior and exterior guard duty.

Airfields, manufacturing plants, factories and military installations were systematically inspected. At the Yokaichi Airfield, 101 planes were found, 30 of them damaged beyond use. These planes included 37 Zero fighters, 18 Raider fighters and 8 Suisei Carrier bombers. There were also 28 training planes, 24 of them damaged.

The Sasayama Army barracks, a permanent base capable of accommodating 1600 men was found to be garrisoned by 20 men under command of Major Noguchi. The post had originally been garrisoned by a thousand men but these had been demobilized prior to the arrival of the Regiment. Large stocks of firearms and other weapons were found in these barracks and turned over to the Chief of Police.

At the Amagasaki school, a guard detachment numbering 98 men was found. They were unarmed and were performing duty as guards of the school which was currently being used as a clothing and equipment warehouse.

At Kansai College, Nigawa, a detachment of 62 Marines from the Osaka Marine Corps were found to be located. They also were unarmed and willing to cooperate in every way. A large brewery located in the 3rd Battalion area was taken over by that portion of the Regiment and put into operation to provide beer for all units.

The patrol area covered by the Regiment was an extensive one, covering the area to the north and east of Kyoto, the Shrine City of Japan. This city had not been bombed because of the many religious edifices there.

After settling down to the new duties of occupation, the men of the Regiment had more leisure time than during any previous period since going into combat. Extensive athletic programs were put into operation. A large well-kept stadium in the 3rd Battalion sector was used for baseball games and the stage of the Takarazuka Opera House was utilized for basketball.

A broad educational program was also launched. In the educational classes established at the Regiment's Serffside College, 567 men were enrolled during the first week and after the program was in working order the total enrollments reached 1,224, an amazing percentage of 93 percent of the Regiment's strength. The 3rd Battalion, being somewhat isolated, set up its own school.

In addition to the sports and educational programs, the Regiment planned sightseeing tours and a well-rounded program of entertainment. Movies were shown regularly at the Opera House and in the Battalion areas. Danny Kaye of Hollywood and Leo Durocher of the Brooklyn Dodgers made a personal appearance and the famed Cherry Blossom Girls gave several command performances of Japanese operas.

In keeping with the War Department's policy of demobilizing men with a high number of points and those with extended periods of duty overseas, the Regiment began rapidly to lose its original identity. Small quotas had left for home from the Philippines but a mass exodus began once the troops were established in Japan.

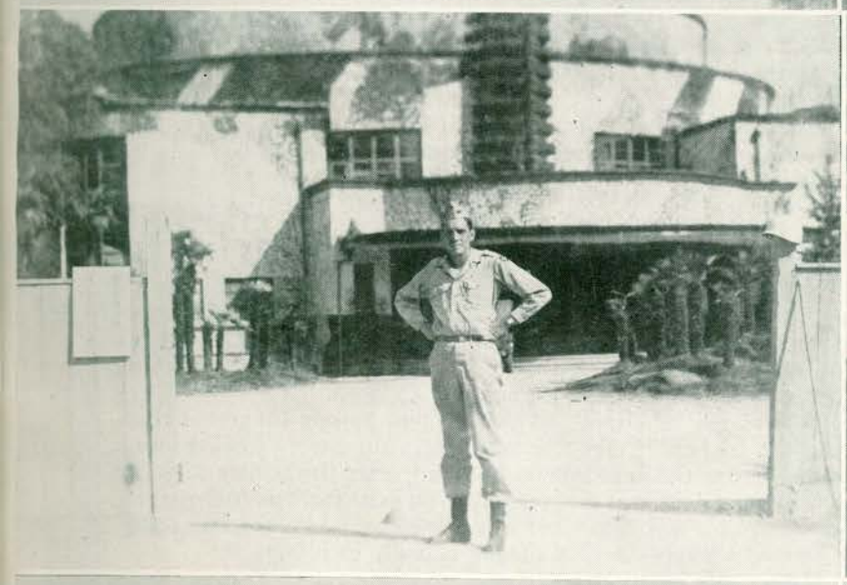

The demobilization quotas in Japan were heavy. On arrival at Takarazuka, the Regiment had a strength of 140 officers and 3311 enlisted men. About a thousand of the men were replacements who had joined the Regiment on Luzon. On October 23rd, 1945, a large quota reduced the strength to 112 officers and 2378 enlisted men. By November 2nd, the strength had been further whittled down to include only 44 officers and 1675 enlisted men. Officer personnel, including Colonel Paul C. Serff, Commander of the Regiment, consisted of one colonel, one lieutenant colonel, no majors and one captain in addition to 41 lieutenants, most of them replacements.

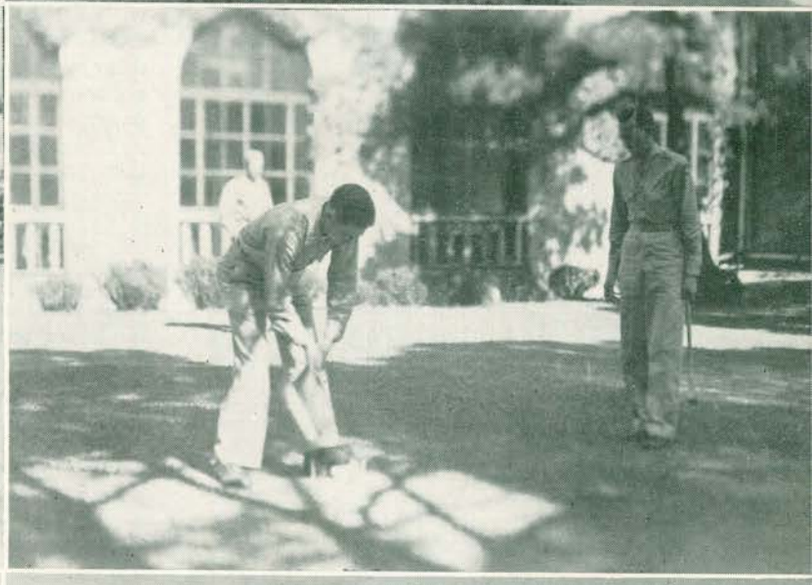

On February 6th, 1946, the Regiment, along with other units of the 33rd Division, was inactivated.

BRIEF HISTORY OF JAPAN

The earliest recorded history of Japan dates back to the seventh century A.D. but the mythical origin of the empire dates much farther back. Popular belief among the Japanese people is that Japan was founded by Jimmu, a grandson of the Sun Goddess. Hirohito, the present ruler, claims to be the 124th direct descendant of this first ruler.

Around the year 600, the Japs, divided up into loosely connected clans, were occupying the islands. Forty-five years later they were unified into a central government. For the next several hundred years the history of Japan was a series of minor battlings between the various factions striving for power. Kublai Khan invaded Japan but was driven back into the sea. Later, the Emperor became a puppet with a shogun actually in power.

Modern history of Japan dates from 1853 when Commodore Perry steamed into Yedo Bay with a powerful American fleet and demanded that Japanese ports be opened to foreign trade. A treaty was signed but feeling against foreigners was so strong that Prince Ii, who signed the treaty, was assassinated.

Following Perry's arrival in Japan, the islands began a new era known as the Restoration period. Under this regime the Emperor again held the power but the actual rulers were still in the background. Once it was innoculated with Western civilization, Japan became a land of imitative genius. The Nips copied steam engines, trains and almost every new invention and scientific device. They copied and improved battleships and guns and in 1904, they launched a Pearl-Harbor type of offensive against the Russian garrison at Port Arthur. This was a short war and the Japanese came out on top. In the First World War, the Japanese were on the side of the Allies and the empire profited greatly from the mandates obtained at the end of that war.

On July 7th, 1937, the Japs used an incident at the Marco Polo Bridge to plunge into a war with China. This was really the beginning of Japan's operations in World War II. Prior to Pearl Harbor and America's entry into the war, the Japanese had tangled with the Russians on the Siberian border.

The Japanese empire consists of four home islands, Honshu, Hokkaido, Kyushu and Shikoku, and more than 4,000 smaller islands. The Empire covers 263,000 square miles with 149,000 square miles of this area making up the four main islands. The coastline of Japan is deeply indented, measuring 17,150 miles in extent. Few places in Japan are far removed from the mountains or any great distance from the sea.

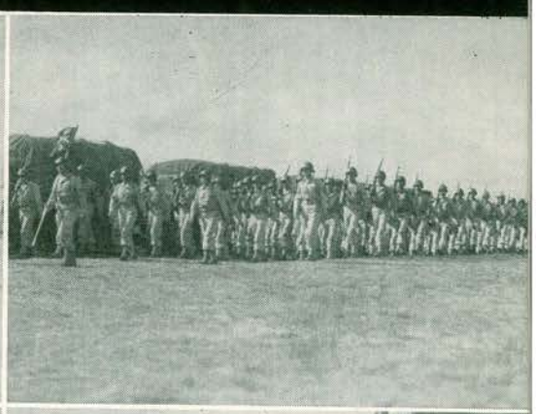

Japan is the center of the world's earthquake belt. There are four or five slight quakes every day in the islands and every six or seven years there are serious quakes. In a single month, December, 1938, more than 600 quakes (all of them minor) were recorded in Japan. In the mountain regions of the islands, the snowfall is the heaviest in the world, often exceeding a hundred inches a month.

Takarazuka, where the 123rd was stationed, is world famed for its opera activities and nearby Kyoto, where the 33rd Division maintained headquarters, is equally renowned for its hundreds of shrines.

ROLL CALL BY STATES

MAP SHOWING NUMBER OF ENLISTED MEN FROM EACH STATE

The officers and men who served with the 123rd Infantry since its activation are a typical cross section of the United States. The men came from every state and from Canada, Cuba, Puerto Rico, Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. As was to be expected, Illinois led with 1627 men coming from the Prairie State.

Officer personnel came from 41 states, Hawaii and Alaska. Illinois also had the most officers among the states. Chicago, with 526 enlisted men and 7 officers, led among the cities of the country. Detroit was second, New York City third and Philadelphia fourth. The tabulation by States is given in the following chart:

V-E and V-J DAY CEREMONIES

Following the welcome news that Japan had surrendered, appropriate V-J ceremonies were held at Bauang, on Luzon, where the Regiment was preparing for an invasion of the Japanese homeland. The V-J ceremonies were held by the Regiment on September 3 at 10:00 A. M. Scenes on this page show the various speakers, the band and the chorus, the crowd that attended, and the Battalions and special units standing in place.

The three pictures across the bottom of the page depict the ceremonies held in the rain at Baguio following the surrender of Germany to end the war in the European theatre.

ENGRS.

Wherever the Infantry went in World War II, the Engineers were almost certain to be close by. Combat Engineers were a vital part of every Division and Regimental Combat Team. In every area of combat operations, the 123rd Infantry Regiment had as one of its components Company A of the 108th Combat Engineers. In New Guinea and the Philippines, this unit performed feats of engineering that made the paths to victory much easier and almost everywhere almost insurmountable obstacles challenged them. They met every situation to win the plaudits of all the other men in the combat team.

In New Guinea, when the 123rd was situated at Finchaven, the roads were their particular problem. The improvised highways, so necessary to the movement of troops and supplies, were continually in bad shape due to the prolonged heavy rains. Almost any day, clad in hip boots, the Engineers could be seen, often knee deep in mud, doing a yeoman pick and shovel job of keeping the roads passable.

At Maffin Bay, Dutch New Guinea, similar difficulties had to be met and overcome. With patrols almost the daily diet of the Infantry, roads and bridges were vital and the Engineers toiled ceaselessly to build and repair the vital jungle transportation routes. In addition, the Engineers gained additional gratitude of the troops when they constructed Fisherman's Wharf pier, a spot on the bay where men could fish and relax.

On Luzon, the Engineers faced their greatest tasks. Combat on a wide scale and better equipped Japanese troops made their job greater and more hazardous. The retreating Nips blew up bridges, mined the roads and damaged or destroyed everything that could be used in our offensive against them. Part of the duty of the Engineers was to rid the highways of mines, a tedious job that required care and efficiency. Bridges were repaired speedily to aid in the advances and in many cases, where the bridges had been totally destroyed, Bailey bridges were erected quickly in order that there might be no delay in the pursuit of the Japanese.

When the 123rd began its push through the mountains, from Pugo towards Baguio, Company A of the 108th Combat Engineers were called upon to do an almost impossible job—that of building roads right behind the advancing units of the Regiment. The Engineers were in the vanguard of most of the advances. The road, beginning at Pugo and rising almost into the clouds that hung over the crests of hills almost 5,000 feet above sea level, that the Engineers constructed was a modern wonder of the world. The Engineers, with their bulldozers, were never more than a quarter of a mile behind the front lines and very often special patrols of Engineers would go well beyond the front on reconnaissance to determine the best routes for the little "Alcan" highway.

Construction of this mountain road, and keeping it in good repair for the heavy traffic, was a large factor in the success of the drive through the mountains. The Japs had no doubt considered such a job practically impossible and when the road had reached the crest of Hill 4980, they no doubt began to surmise the beginning of the end.

On the Kennon Road, beyond Rosario, the Engineers found the roads heavily mined and their efficiency in rooting these out made the highways safe and insured the flow of traffic bringing supplies and troops forward.

Many strategists have declared that one of the potent weapons of the Infantry was the bulldozer of the accompanying Engineers and this was borne out by the performances of Company A of the 108th Engineers. The Engineers received a citation for their excellent performance of duty in construction of the mountain highway.

Construction work of every kind, often with inadequate equipment and materials, was the daily fare of the Engineers. They solved every problem, overcame every barrier, and their efforts added materially to the success of the 123rd Infantry's operations all the way through.

CO. A 108th MEDICS

The contribution towards the ultimate victory in World War II that was made by the medics can never be measured. Likewise, the number of American lives saved by the prompt and efficient performance of duty by the Medical Corpsmen will never be known. An integral part of the 123rd Infantry Regimental Combat Team, the men of Company A of the 108th Medical Battalion were much in evidence on every battle front and in the field hospitals a little farther back.

All through combat, Company A of the 108th Medics was attached to the 123rd. At Finschaven, during preparatory staging for battle, the medics contributed to the welfare of the men by careful attention to those afflicted with jungle maladies, those suffering from accidents and injuries, and those who contracted serious illnesses. Company A was attached to the Regiment at Maffin Bay in Dutch New Guinea when the Regiment operated as Tornado Task Force. The casualties incurred during the many combat patrols were promptly put on the road to a speedy recovery once they had received the careful attention of the Medics. Working with the Medics of our own regiment, the men of Company A of the 108th provided half of a smooth functioning medical team.

The Medics performed their duty under the same combat conditions experienced by the front-line infantrymen. Often their perils were greater as they advanced out into open terrain to administer to the wounded and bring them back to a point of safety where further care could be rendered. Garbed as infantrymen, and without the guarantee of safety accorded medical men under the Geneva Conference (a rule of warfare ignored by the Japanese all through the war) the Medics were often compelled to offer themselves as targets as they carried out their missions of mercy. Furthermore, until late in the war, the Medics could wear no distinctive award of merit such as the Cambat Infantryman's Badge and even after the Medical Badge had been established, the Medical men were without the benefits of additional combat pay. The respect shown the Medics by the infantry can be illustrated by the fact that in many cases the units took up collections on payday to compensate for the combat pay they richly deserved but never received.

Weary Medics trudged up and down the rugged mountain trails, never considering personal danger or extreme fatigue as they carried out their job until the last wounded man had been brought to safety and given medical attention.

In the records of awards in this war, the Medics stand high. Many are the deeds of heroism they performed and the percentage of medals awarded to men of the Medics is probably higher than that of the infantry. Danger and heroism was their daily routine.

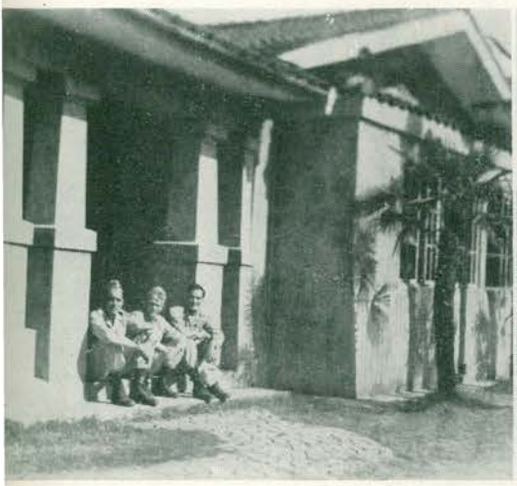

Company A of the 108th Medics received a unit citation for their performance of duty during the Luzon Campaign. They also received the Meritorious Service Unit Plaque in recognition of sterling performance of duty over a period of six months.

Like other attached and service units, the Medics often had to work for extended periods without rest—casualties usually demanded attention with the utmost speed possible and the Medics stood ready to deliver at all times. The 123rd Infantry was fortunate to include such an organization as Company A of the 108th Medics in its makeup.

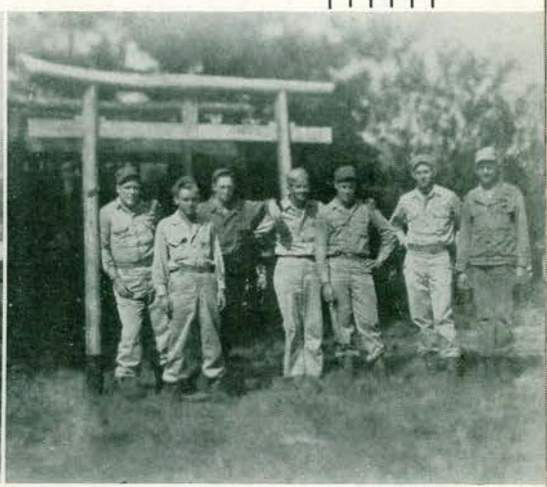

The Medics had no periods of relaxation. When troops were drawn out of the front lines their duties continued; in the disease-ridden areas that the Regiment carried out its tactical assignments from the time of leaving the Hawaiian Islands right through the Occupation of Japan, there was much to be done to keep the men healthy and free of disease.

Enough cannot be written to give justification to the outstanding services registered by the men of Company A of the 108th Medics in all their operations as part of the 123rd Infantry. Each member of the company won the respect and admiration of the doughboys and their praises were sung loud and often. The history of the Regiment is closely allied with the history of the Medics; the Infantry's story is much their story.

Without the services of the men of Company A, 108th Medics, the Regiment could not have achieved its outstanding record in battle and without these soldiers of mercy the casualty rate of deaths would have been much higher. This unit deserves the highest credit for its contribution to the success of every operation of the 123rd Infantry Regiment.

HOMEWARD BOUND!

The most welcome news of the war—we're going home. Demobilization began in the Philippines with small quotas. Soon after the occupation of Japan was begun, the men began the homeward trek in groups of several hundred. By the time the Regiment, along with the rest of the Division, was deactivated in February, 1946, very few of the men who campaigned in the jungles of New Guinea and the mountains of Luzon were still with the outfit. Homeward bound! These were the magic words that spelled the end of long duty overseas.

Left: The trucks roll up at the entrucking point at Takarazuka, Japan, and the men climb aboard. Center: The trucks loaded, the soldiers wave goodbye to buddies and the first lap of the journey homeward is under way. Right: Down the streets of the town the trucks roll. The cargo is a gay crowd. First, it's Nagoya, the embarkation point and then, after a few days afloat, it's Fort Lewis and the good old U. S. A.

Medals and Awards

MEDAL OF HONOR

John R. McKinney of Company A earned the nation's highest award, the Congressional Medal of Honor by an amazing one-man battle with a horde of Japs during the period when Company A was operating as a special task force in the Dingalan Bay area.

In winning this highest of all honors (established during the Civil War) McKinney quelled a Japanese infiltration single handed. In a battle which pitted himself against almost a hundred Japs on the morning of May 11, 1945, he killed 39 counted dead and undoubtedly bagged a few more as they attempted to get away by swimming the nearby river.

In his pre-dawn battle, McKinney was forced to operate from several positions, alternating as the situation in a particular spot became too hot. Twice he had to capture an American machine gun which was being manned by the Japs—once, out of ammunition which forced him to kill eight Japs in hand-to-hand knife and bayonet fighting.

Twice McKinney had to retreat when he ran out of ammunition for his rifle. By his heroic single-handed battle, McKinney saved his company from a surprise attack and his efforts saved the lives of many men. John McKinney was presented with the Medal of Honor by President Truman in ceremonies at the White House.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS

William E. Warren of Company K was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his extraordinary heroism in combat during action on Mount Calugong on April 17th, 1945. The company was attacking strong enemy emplacements in the rugged mountains when Warren performed his deed of valor.

The company had been halted by Japanese rifle, machine gun and mortar fire and two of the lead scouts had been wounded by a Nip machine gun. In the face of sniper fire, Warren crawled to within five yards of the enemy emplacement and then, springing to his feet he rushed the position.

Although painfully wounded he seized the Jap machine gun and turned it on nearby enemy foxholes. Despite his pain he remained at the gun until his squad could advance and mop up the remaining Japs in the area.

In his deed of outstanding heroism, William Warren captured single handed, a Jap machine gun, killed at least five Japs and was responsible for clearing the way for further advances of Company K. Warren was presented with the coveted decoration by General Clarkson at ceremonies held on the parade grounds at Bauang in the Philippines.

LEGION OF MERIT

The Legion of Merit Medal stems from the Badge for Military Merit established by George Washington in 1782. Like the Badge for Military Merit, it is awarded for extraordinary fidelity and essential service honorably and well performed in a position of responsibility. Men of the Regiment who were awarded the Legion of Merit include:

Col. Paul C. Serff
Capt. Norman Garling
Major Ransom Yonce
Sgt. Paul Ward
Major Robert Connolly
Major James Cregg
Major Stan W. Carlson
Capt. George Schless

SOLDIER'S MEDAL

Instituted in 1926, the Soldier's Medal is awarded to military personnel who, while serving with the army, distinguish themselves by heroism not involving actual conflict with the enemy. Three men of the Regiment were awarded the Soldier's Medal, all of them for saving men from drowning, one in the Hawaiian Islands and two in New Guinea. Men winning the Soldier's Medal include:

Franklin E. Ross
Harry R. Weer
Frederick H. Burk (Posthumous)

SILVER STAR MEDAL

Established on Aug. 8, 1932, the Silver Star Medal is the Army's third highest combat medal. When first authorized it was to be awarded to persons previously cited in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine Campaign, and World War I and as such it superseded the wearing of a silver star on the campaign ribbon of the war concerned. General Douglas MacArthur was awarded the first Silver Star Medal in recognition of extreme heroism and gallantry in action on seven occasions during World War I.

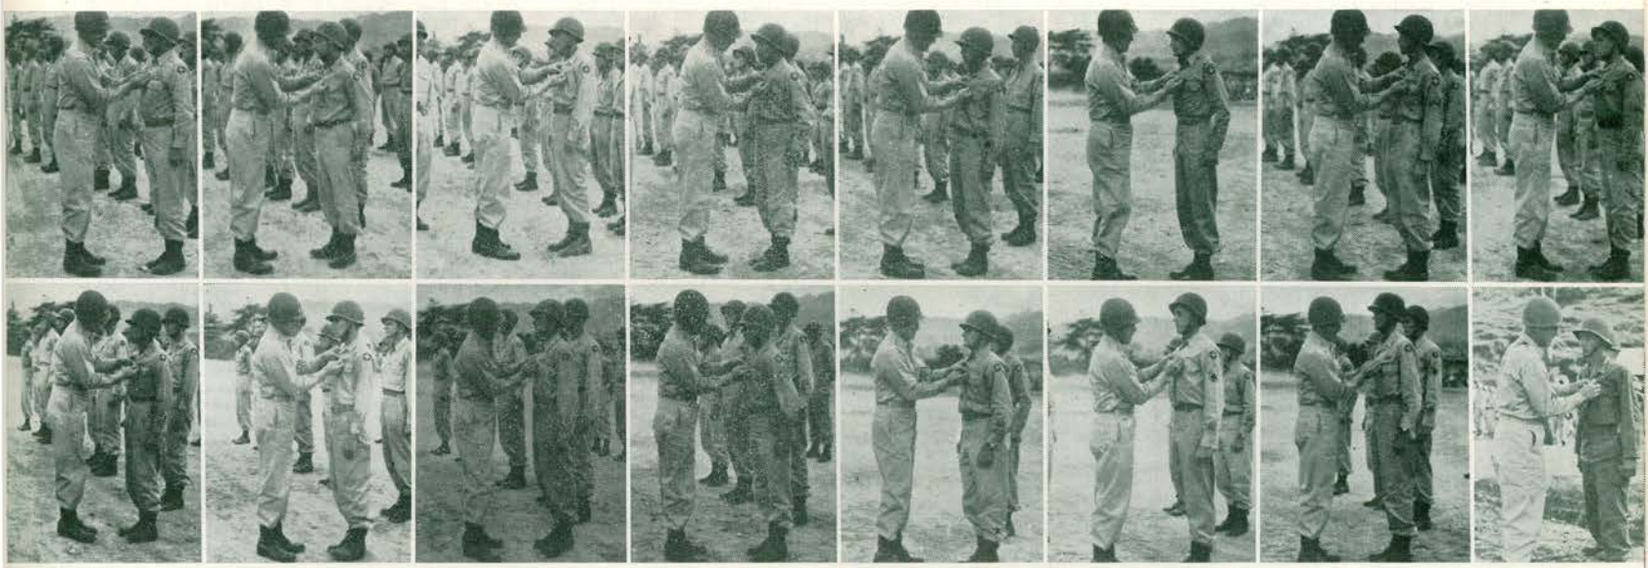

In World War II the medal was awarded to those who distinguished themselves by gallantry and intrepidity in action against the enemy. Officers and men of the 123rd Infantry were awarded 86 Silver Star Medals with two Bronze Oak Leaf Clusters being awarded in lieu of a second decoration.

BRONZE STAR MEDAL

The Bronze Star Medal, especially designed to give recognition to non-flying forces, was authorized on Feb. 4, 1944, by order of the President of the United States. Similar in design to the Silver Star Medal it may be awarded for heroic or meritorious achievement or service not involving aerial flight. The medal may be awarded in actual combat or in direct support of combat operations.

BRONZE STAR MEDAL

In the 123rd Infantry Regiment, including the early occupation of Japan, 326 officers and enlisted men had been awarded the Bronze Star Medal in recognition of heroism in action or for extended periods of meritorious service in support of front line operations. In four instances, Bronze Oak Leaf Clusters were awarded in lieu of a second medal.

UNIT CITATIONS

COMPANY F AND COMPANY G

Two companies of the 123rd Infantry Regiment, Co. F and Co. G, were cited for outstanding duty in action during the Luzon Campaign. Company F was cited for performance of duty on April 22nd, 1945 during the assault on Mt. Calugong. With a third of the company casualties resulting from withering enemy fire, the remainder pushed on and despite the full fury of a Japanese night attack, annihilating the enemy to reopen vital supply lines for the adjacent regiment. The men of the company carried out their mission despite extreme fatigue, lack of water and food.

Company G was cited for performance of duty on April 23 through April 25. This company advanced up the slopes of Hill 4980 and despite high casualties and two repulsed attacks, launched a third attack to take the vital points. After a hasty reorganization, the tired, hungry and thirsty men refused to stop and despite the fact that half of the company were casualties began a tortuous climb to the peak of Mt. Santo Tomas, 7,100 feet above sea level. Company G wiped out an entire Japanese company to gain their objective.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE CROSS

Private First Class Vernon Fairchild was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his heroic performance of duty on April 18th, 1945. As a member of Company K, Fairchild was engaged with the rest of the company in an assault on strongly entrenched Jap units high in the mountains. His fearless act of bravery resulted in his being shot through the head by a Jap sniper and he subsequently lost an eye and the hearing in one ear. Private Fairchild was a large factor in the success of the assault by Company K.

MERITORIOUS SERVICE UNIT PLAQUES

Captain Stuart Johnson receives the Meritorious Service Plaque for Service Company. General P. W. Clarkson, Division Commander, made the presentation.

Two units of the 123rd Infantry Regiment, Service Company and the Medical Detachment, were awarded Meritorious Service Unit Plaques for outstanding achievement during the New Guinea Campaign. Both units received a second award for similar performances during the Luzon Campaign.

Service Company earned its award by efficiently supplying all units of the regiment with rations, equipment and transportation during combat in the Maffin Bay sector of Dutch New Guinea. In addition, trucks and drivers were furnished for dock duty during the loading of ships for Philippine Island task forces.

The Medical Detachment was cited for conspicuous and outstanding devotion to duty. In the Toem-Sarmi area of New Guinea, numerous jungle patrols were necessary to supplement perimeter defenses. The Medics displayed bravery and courage as they administered first aid to wounded men and by their efficient services they saved many lives.

The Meritorious Service Unit Plaque is awarded for services performed over a six months' period. Men of the cited units wear the Award of Merit Laurel Wreathe on their right sleeve.

Major Stevens, Regimental Surgeon, accepts Meritorious Service Plaque on behalf of the Medical Detachment from General Clarkson at Regimental ceremonies.

ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART

Created by General George Washington during the American Revolution, the Purple Heart is believed to be the first military decoration for bravery to be awarded in the American Army without respect to rank. Early in that war, awards were confined to the outstanding military leaders and Washington himself received the nation's first gold medal in appreciation for driving the British out of Boston in 1776. The Purple Heart (called the Badge of Military Merit) was established on Aug. 7, 1782. Notwithstanding Washington's injunction that the Badge of Military Merit be considered a permanent award, it was allowed to fall into disuse after three awards had been made.

On Feb. 22, 1932, the 200th Anniversary of Washington's birth, the War Department announced, "By order of the President of the United States, the Purple Heart established by General George Washington at Newburgh, New York . . . is hereby revived out of respect to his memory and military achievements." The modern Purple Heart, designed by Elizabeth Will, is awarded to all who receive wounds as a result of enemy action which necessitate treatment by a medical officer.

In addition to the men listed here as recipients of the Purple Heart, all men of the Regiment who were killed in action or who died of wounds, listed in the IN MEMORIAL section of this book, have been awarded the Purple Heart, posthumously.

The Purple Heart Medal is more than a ribbon or medal award which is worn on the military uniform. It is a symbol of sacrifices made and sufferings endured as part of the price of victory. Some of the Regiment's recipients of this honor never lived to receive their honors and many more have permanent scars as all too vivid reminders of the toll exacted for our victories. The trails of glory of the 123rd Infantry are blazoned with the heroic deeds of those who died and those wounded in action. In the Regiment 484 Purple Heart Medals were awarded—94 of them posthumously. Company A had the largest number of awards, 58. Company I had 54 and Company F, 50. In addition to the original awards, 17 men received an Oak Leaf Cluster for a second wound and 2 men received two clusters for two additional wounds.

"...we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain—"
ABRAHAM LINCOLN

In Memoriam

DEAR MOM:

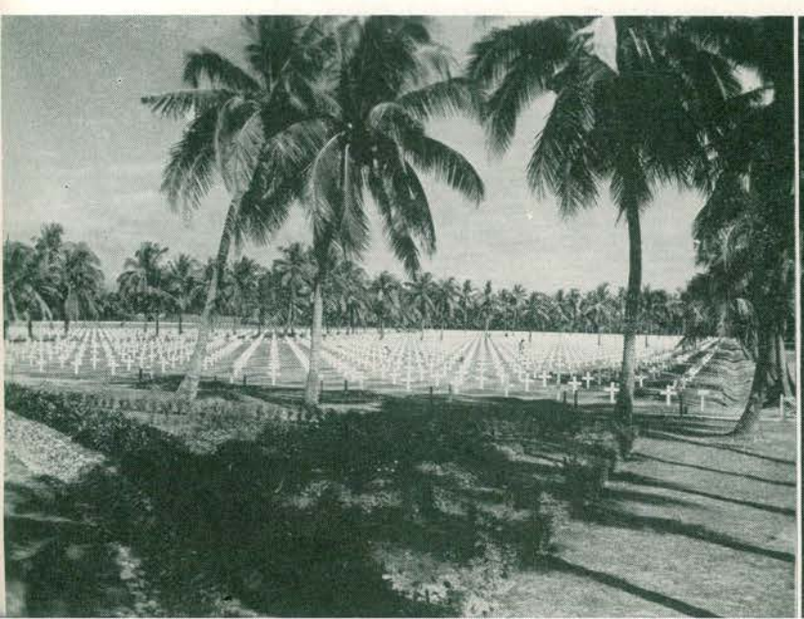

This won't be much—what I have to say;
It's an after-thought in an endless day.
Some day you'll read this; then, dear, you'll know
It was God's will—so, I had to go.
No monument of any kind—
As the famed have earned, shall you ever find
Erected for us who died in a foreign land
So that liberty and freedom forever should stand.
Medals and crosses—not ours shall they be;
Ribbons and clusters we will never see:
But we gave all we had to appease war's lust
And make Democracy the King in a world that is just.

Mother, dearest, I ask on Poppy Day
Buy one for me as if to say—
"I remember, son, you did your best
And I hope and pray that in peace you rest."

WE GENTLY SOUND TAPS....

A wreath of roses on a white wooden cross . . . an honor sentry at the cemetery flagpole, with a backdrop of palms and neat rows of crosses . . . a bugler sounds Taps in reverent final tribute . . . a memorial board in the chapel lists our honored dead . . . the beautiful chapel at Santa Barbara Military Cemetery . . . the shaded drive approaching the final resting place of many of our men . . . all these are symbols of the sacrifice some made in order that others might live to enjoy the fruits of peace. . . . We sound Taps, gently and reverently for those who fell in battle. May they rest in peace.

THE FLYING DINOSAUR

The Flying Dinosaur, newspaper of the Regiment, began publication in New Guinea and appeared daily all through the New Guinea Campaign and during a major part of the Luzon Campaign. The paper took its name from the designation often given to New Guinea because of the shape of that island.

In conjunction with the paper, the Regiment formed its own group of reporters, the Bronze Key Guild. Each company was represented by a unit reporter and these men did an excellent job of turning in writeups on their units.

The Flying Dinosaur gained fame by scooping the world on the invasion of the Philippines. The paper had an extra out less than an hour after the first wave of assault troops had hit the beaches on Leyte. The Dinosaur was also the first paper in the world to announce the invasion of Morotai in the Halmaheras.

In New Guinea, an edition of the paper was printed in Japanese and droppped by cub plane over the Japanese garrison area at Sarmi Point. Shown on this page are a few typical editions of the paper. Circulation of the Flying Dinosaur reached its highest point at Maffin Bay, Dutch New Guinea, where several thousand copies daily brought the news to 70,000 troops in the area.

FISHING

Fishing was good in most of the overseas areas. In the more remote parts of Kauai on the Hawaiian Islands the streams were well stocked and those who had the time and opportunity to fish usually came back with a good string. Deep sea fishing was also popular. Some of the men indulged in underwater goggle fishing, using a spear.

At Maffin Bay, the rivers supplied a type of catfish and some of the men put out lines overnight to get a good mess of fish. With diversion facilities at a minimum at Maffin Bay, a fishing pier was erected. Called Fisherman's Wharf, this spot had a Coca Cola bar and was a popular place for men to relax. In addition to the pier, the Regiment had a motorboat which was used for deep sea fishing. Several good catches were made as the anglers trolled up and down the ocean front.

In the Philippines there was very little time for fishing until the troops had bivouacked at Bauang. Some of the men went out in native boats to indulge in deep sea fishing and others fished in the rivers in the area.

In Japan, due to the occupation duties and the need of fish for food for the natives, there was very little fishing. A true sportsman, Colonel Serff was an ardent fisherman and hunter and he encouraged this type of recreation.

Shown on this page are several fishing shots. At the top is shown Fisherman's Wharf with its pier wide enough to accommodate a truck and the thatched roof fishing shack forming a T at the end of it. The second picture and the one to the right of it show a sand shark, 19 feet, 8 inches long, caught at Bauang on Luzon. The picture below that of the sand shark shows men of Company A with a nice specimen caught on Kauai in the Hawaiian Islands.

ATHLETICS

Although the facilities were not the best to be desired, sports activities were engaged in by the men of the Regiment at all of the overseas areas of operation. The men often constructed their own playing fields.

In the Hawaiian Islands, an intensive program of athletics was carried out with outstanding tournaments in baseball and basketball. Boxers also represented the Regiment and Division in the Central Pacific championships.

In New Guinea, a baseball field was constructed at Finschaven, complete with backstop screen and player dugout. A less elaborate field was put into shape for use at Maffin Bay, Dutch New Guinea. In all areas, a great many volleyball courts were laid out and this sport was one of the principal sports in New Guinea.

In the Philippines, softball and volleyball were the key sports. At Bauang a fine softball area was put into use with several playing fields laid out. A half dozen games were to be seen in progress all through the afternoon and early evening. The Division set up a basketball court at Baguio and the Regiment had several teams competing for the Division championship.

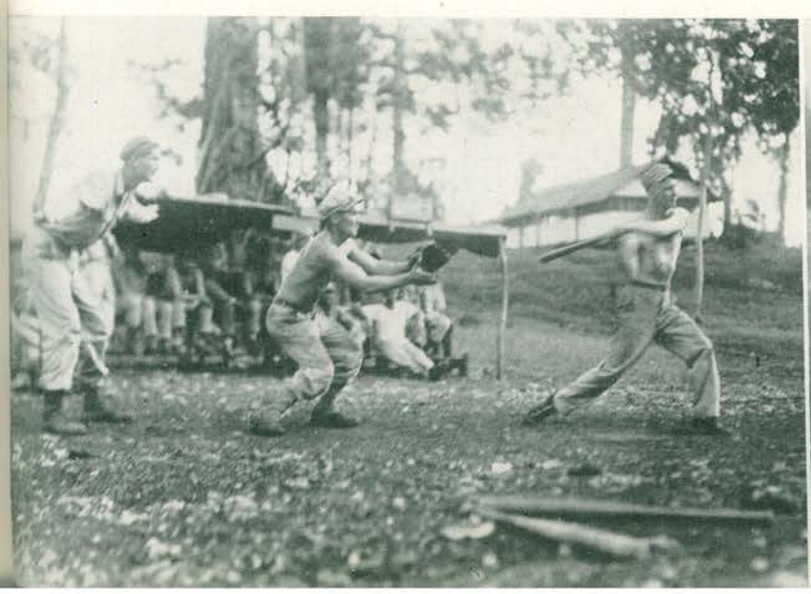

In Japan, the Takarazuka Opera House stage was utilized as a basketball court and an excellent stadium field near the Third Battalion was used for baseball.

Shown on this page are several shots of the men of the Regiment in action. Top picture shows a volleyball game in progress in the Command Post area of Maffin Bay. The picture below it is a dugout scene on the diamond at Finschaven. At the lower left is an action shot taken during the progress of a softball game at Finschaven. Lower center is another scene, taken from behind the backstop. At the lower right is another volleyball scene at Maffin Bay.

While the tactical disposition of the troops during most of the time overseas prevented extensive tournament play, sports on a unit basis was a popular pastime.

INFORMATION AND EDUCATION

The program of Information and Education for the Regiment was set up while the Regiment was at Finschaven. Captain Stanley W. Carlson served as I. and E. officer during the New Guinea and Luzon Campaigns and during the early occupation of Japan.

The program consisted of keeping the men informed concerning all war fronts, supplying information for future zones of operation, and making all possible education facilities available to the men of the Regiment.

Education activities, centering around Army Institute Courses, were begun in New Guinea. Maps of all theatres of war were also kept posted, with daily changes in front lines keeping all war fronts current.

In the Philippines, the program was intensified. At Pugo, on Luzon, information centers were established in each battalion and in the command post area. After Baguio had been captured, the education activities were also stepped up and when the Regiment was established at Bauang an enlarged center, complete with G.I. college called Serffside University, was set up. The center consisted of a map display room, a museum of Japanese equipment, complete with a Shinto Shrine, and three classroom buildings.

In Japan, Serffside College was quartered in the Opera House Building. Enrollments began to skyrocket in the Philippines and after the Regiment had been established in Japan the total enrollment reached 2,024, a record for Pacific units and probably the best Regimental record of all American troops.

The Information and Education office also published a series of booklets on the Philippines, prior to departure for that area, and a series of booklets on Japan prior to departure for Occupation. A series of lectures on Japan was also conducted. In New Guinea, in cooperation with the Tactics office, a booklet on jungle warfare was prepared.

Shown on this page are typical shots centering around the Information and Education activities. Top picture shows portion of the I. and E. center at Bauang. Below it is shown the situation map board at Pugo on Luzon. At the lower left is shown another view of the Bauang center with Serffside University in the background. At the lower right is another bulletin board showing the European front.

The usual touring troupes of stage and screen stars did not appear before troops of the Regiment in any abundance but outstanding home talent shows put on by the men themselves and frequent movies provided overseas diversion. In all areas of operation, the men received three or more movies a week, supplemented by other stage presentations.

On the Mojave Desert, Al Jolson appeared before the troops as did Kay Francis and a supporting troupe. In the Hawaiian Islands the towns provided movie theatres, supplemented by movies shown in the Battalion areas. Little Jack Little, Ray Bolger and others made personal appearances.

In New Guinea, Bob Hope, Jerry Colona, Kay Francis and others stars made up one troupe which entertained the men. Carole Landis and another troupe appeared in New Guinea, giving their performance in a driving rain. Judith Anderson brought a well-balanced assembly of stars to Maffin Bay.

In the Philippines, a troupe of legitimate theatre stars presented several outstanding stage plays in the Division area. In Japan, Danny Kaye and Leo Durocher entertained the Regiment and the famed Cherry Blossom Girls presented several operas in the Takarazuka Opera House.

Talent shows were presented in all areas of operation and even aboard ship during moves. At Finschaven an excellent stage was constructed and several shows using talented men of the Regiment were presented.

Pictured on this page are several shots of entertainment areas and performers. At the top of the page is shown the movie area between Regimental Headquarters and the Third Battalion at Bauang. Below it, at the left, are shown Lieutenants Chasin and Steinberg, stalwart performers on every Regimental show. They also planned the many productions. Second from the top, at the right, is shown Kay Francis and her troupe.

SONG OF THE 123RD INFANTRY

WORDS AND MUSIC BY LT. BENJAMIN CHASIN

'Twas in the month September in the year of '42
When every man in the land, had a job to do.
A fighting crew was needed to help the Infantry
So they got together and formed the 1-2-3.
They got the boys from Illinois—and from the wooly west
They even got some Texans—and some of Brooklyn's best.
Though we have no high tradition, or history today
Before this fight is over you are sure to hear us say—

CHORUS

Oh, the 1-2-3, of the Infantry is the regiment for me.
It's new, it's true, but I'm telling you
We're going to make history.
We're on our way to glory—we're out to beat the foe;
So it's 1-2-3—let's go, and we'll see you in Tokyo.

2.

In '43 we left the states for the island of Kauai.
There we began to train again—but this time we knew why.
They trained us hard and trained us fast but it was quite all right;
Because we knew that at last we were pointed for the fight.
They hit the Gilberts and the Carolines but we were left behind.
But soon we were at sea again and really didn't mind.
We wound up in New Guinea—down Finschafen way.
And even in the rain and mud, you still could hear us say—

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This Regimental History was planned in the icy days of a winter's end, began to take form in the balmy days of spring, was sweated over during sultry summer days, reached the proofing stage in crisp autumn and was completed when chilly wintry blasts again blew. The editor gratefully acknowledges the efforts of those whose assistance made the job easier and without whom the book would have been a far less pretentious volume. Special acknowledgement is accorded to the following:

Mr. Ross McKone of the Webb Publishing Company for his advice, guidance and supervision all through production.
The production and mechanical staff of the Webb Publishing Company for their pride in craftsmanship in producing a worthy book.
The S. K. Smith Company for covers.
Colonel Paul C. Serff, Regimental Commander, for his encouragement and assistance.
Major General P. W. Clarkson, Division Commander, for contributing to the written matter.
The many officers and men of the Regiment, far too numerous to mention individually, for their willingness to contribute pictures and information in order that the book might be complete.
