FOREWORD

On April 3, 1944 the 30th Special United States Naval Construction Battalion was organized and commenced training at Camp Perry, NCTC, Williamsburg, Virginia. It was a rainy day but the weather failed to dampen the spirits of that newly formed group of one thousand men—strangers for the most part—as they embarked upon their new and uncharted career. These men have worked and played together; amid the sweat of labor and the laughter of fun and frivolity they have lived together these many months, united in the service of their country.

Following a period of intensive training the battalion moved to Camp Thomas, Davisville, Rhode Island. In July 1944 the 30th Special Battalion was split into two sections. The first section, comprised of companies A and D, plus half of Headquarters, shipped to Lido Beach, New York, for transport to the European theatre. The second section remained at Camp Thomas for further duty. Later we were shipped to Hueneme, California, and then to the South Pacific, finally arriving at Calicoan, a small island off the tip of Samar in the Philippines. Here we remained through the rest of the war, merging after the war with the 19th Special Battalion.

* * * * *

In October 1943, the 19th Special United States Naval Construction Battalion was formed. This was followed by two months of intensive training and drilling, grouping and regrouping—finally, late in November the battalion was commissioned. Again came training, three weeks of it. Then orders! Move! It was on Christmas Day 1943 that we loaded aboard a train bound for Camp Thomas. Here we remained for a few days and finally on January 4, 1944 amid sleet and snow, we were loaded aboard a ship for points unknown, and what was to prove to be a long tour overseas filled with work, sweat, and some play.

The weather became warmer and then hotter. Then we found ourselves passing through the Panama Canal, Pacific bound. The first stop was Finchs-hafen, New Guinea. Here we spent four grueling months working in heat and tropical rain. Then the battalion was split into two sections, the first section remaining behind, the second section moving on to Mios Woendi Island, opposite Biak.

It was October 1944 that we moved again. This time it was a big push—the invasion of the Philippines. On D-Day we went in with the help of a tropical typhoon and made camp at San Antone, Samar. Here we remained until January of 1945 when once again we broke camp and came to Calicoan—being the first Special Battalion ashore.

In October 1945 the Second Section of the 30th Special and the Second Section of the 19th Special were merged. This merger of the two battalions which had been neighbors since the arrival of the 30th occurred as a result of the heavy loss of personnel through discharges. From this date on the two administrations were combined and the battalion assumed the name of the 19th. Because of the rapid demobilization of the original 19th it became impossible to publish a separate book so that its material was incorporated into the 30th's book which was near completion. It is with these two groups, the second sections of the 30th and 19th Special United States Battalions, that we deal here.

Here Are Two Seabee Stories

30th Special Battalion

More specifically, this is a pictorial review of the overseas activities of the men who helped deliver the goods for the Navy. This may be interpreted as the story of your own Bill or Joe or Eddie, for within these covers we have endeavored to display the living story, in pictures, of individual personalities. How better could a Seabee Battalion be defined than "... a sizeable group of individuals, each of whom possesses a knowledge of some specific trade or profession, is able to think for himself, to perform his duties under pressure, working together as a highly synchronized unit and willing to fight together if need be to preserve the freedom and personal right for which our great country stands."

The 30th Special, Second Section, remained at Camp Thomas until October 1944. During the months of this stay our unit established an enviable record through its stevedoring operations and an extensive camp beautification program. We loaded many ships with vital wartime cargo, and, in the absence of ships, our battalion was busily engaged in landscaping, clearing away useless trees and brush to provide a cleaner, healthier camp.

Following an embarkation leave we entrained for the West Coast, arriving at Port Hueneme, California, on October 15th. Immediately we entered into another extensive military and technical training program in preparation for our future assignment. At Hueneme we received an additional draft of men to replace those we had lost through various transfers on the East Coast and this new group was assigned to stevedore training. Then came more important stevedoring assignments, the loading of cargo for our fighting forces throughout the vast Pacific theatre.

February 28, 1945. That is one date we all remember so well, for on that moist Wednesday afternoon we went aboard the M/S Japara, a Dutch merchant vessel, with our destination unknown. During a layover of several days at Pearl Harbor we enjoyed the rare privilege of shore liberty. What with Honolulu, Waikiki Beach, and the mammoth Pearl Harbor Naval Base itself, we had a swell time indeed. Our sea voyage was uneventful from the standpoint of enemy interference. But we did have some experiences which, although now good for a laugh, appeared quite serious at the time. Among these we feel obligated to mention the seasickness which created so many "rail benders" the first three days at sea; also, we recall vividly those desperate attempts to enjoy a comfortably cool sleep 'neath the stars—only to be rudely awakened by a sudden tropical shower.

Our voyage came to an end as we anchored out in Leyte Gulf on April 5, 1945. Two days later we had docked and gone ashore on Calicoan, a small island at the southern tip of Samar in the Philippines. Calicoan has since been connected with Samar by a splendid hard surface coral causeway constructed by Seabees. As dusk settled over the tiny island the last of our men arrived at the sandy, barren camp site.

The days and weeks that followed our landing strongly emphasize the Seabee motto, "CAN DO." On the second morning our cooks served a hot breakfast; tents and temporary wooden structures mushroomed across our previously bare camp site. No sooner had the very essentials been attended to than construction was started on our permanent living quarters, keeping pace with the well planned administration building, mess hall, dental clinic, and sick bay. Within a remarkably short time the tents disappeared as we moved into our cool, comfortable quonset huts. The camp was our pride and joy and the object of much discussion by the personnel of the Naval Supply Depot and the members of various Seabee battalions. Our accomplishment served both as an incentive and a pattern for other units.

Let it be understood moreover that this outstanding bit of camp construction was effected through the efficient use of a limited number of men, many of whom had had no previous construction experience. While all of this building was under way our stevedore gangs were loading and discharging ships that were running right up to the lines of offensive action. Thus we were in the very thick of the battle. Ours was the battle of supplies and we are proud that the 30th Special, Second Section, did its part.

We could write volumes about the work of our unit 'neath the tropical sun, discharging ships in the stream during the inky black of the night; soft-ball games, baseball, basketball . . . a pause for thanks to God and singing His praises. But somehow we feel that you, our families and friends, will learn more about our overseas life through the pictures that follow. Soon all of us will be home again to live with you in peace, a real peace that we pray will last forever. We hope to pick up this book years hence and glance through its pages and thus re-live many of the incidents portrayed by these photographs.

19th SPECIAL BATTALION

After that uneventful sixty-seven day trip through the Canal on the good ship, "Cape Bon," and a short tour of duty at Langamak, New Guinea, the 19th Special was split into two sections.

The second section left Finchhafen, New Guinea on June 10, 1944, and after a short stop at Hollandia, where we loaded those water distillation units in a mighty rough sea, we put into Mios Woendi Island on June 18. Since there was still fighting on nearby Biak, only daylight operations were permitted. The 19th, being the only stevedore outfit on the island, had plenty of work to do, and at the end of our four months' stay the captain of the base presented our outfit with a fine letter of commendation.

October 18, 1944 saw us pull stakes and head north to take part in the Leyte invasion. Our transport, the liberty ship, Joseph Blackburn, dropped anchor off San Antone, Samar, the 28 of October.

The first of two typhoons arrived at San Antone that day, too. It caused considerable damage to the Blackburn, but there were no serious injuries to any of the men. The first of over two hundred and fifty air attacks came the very next day . . . still no casualties. In fact, we did not lose a man due to the air raids during the entire operation.

Samar looked like any other Pacific island except that it seemed to have more than its share of mud and rain. No one will ever forget how we used to trudge to work through that knee-deep mud past all sorts of trucks, dozers, and other equipment stalled beyond repair. And remember those caribou holes, fellows?

Just after the first of the year, when things had begun to settle down to a normal pace, and the air raids were over, we received the word to pack our gear and move southward to Calicoan Island. We made the forty-five mile trip down the coast of Samar in small groups until all of our four hundred and fifty some men had been transferred to Calicoan.

There was no time for us to take a month off and build our camp, so we did that when we were not stevedoring—and we stevedored twenty-four hours a day. But our camp went up, and in grand style. Our food was the best on the island, too.

In athletics we have had some teams we are mighty proud of. Remember that softball team on Woendi, and the basketball and baseball teams on Calicoan? That basketball team was the Calicoan Champ!

Since leaving the States we have earned several letters of commendation through our handling of all the different types of cargo that have been shipped overseas. There have been tense moments, but by sticking together and working side by side we have been able to gain a fine name for ourselves.
