Where is the prince who can afford so to cover his country with troupes for its defense, as that ten thousand men, descending from the clouds, might not, in many places, do an infinite deal of mischief before a force could be brought together to repel them?

FOREWORD

In editing this, the history of the 13th Airborne Division, we hope that we have not committed the grievous error of considering our commission as merely a personal honor. We feel that the honor and the high responsibility entailed therewith allows us an opportunity to render a real service to our comrades and to our beloved Division. It is our most sincere hope that in the years to come, when the memory of recent days fade, you may take this book in your lap and recall memories of friends—of trials and triumphs—of days we spent together in the 13th Airborne Division.

—The Editorial and Management Board.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL LESLEY J. McNAIR, U.S.A.

DEDICATED

This unit history is dedicated to the memory of the late Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, U.S.A., under whose direction as Commanding General, Army Ground Forces, the 13th Airborne Division was activated, organized and trained. His deep personal and professional interest in the Airborne Development was well known to this command, where his visits were inspiring, his words encouraging, and his military attributes an exemplary standard to officers and men alike.

We take pride in having served under the command of one of America's outstanding military leaders whose vision and foresight contributed so greatly to the success of our efforts. To his memory as a courageous commander, a superior soldier and a supreme leader we render the final salute of the Division: "Morituri te Salutamus."

MAJOR GENERAL ELBRIDGE G. CHAPMAN
COMMANDING GENERAL
13th AIRBORNE DIVISION

to the TROOPS

THE 13th Airborne Division will have held its last parade and marched in final review as this published record of its men and their activities is being released from the press. It is particularly fitting that the division history should appear simultaneously with the passing of units from active existence to take their place in the annals of history.

The detailed events depicted herein are of interest chiefly to those members who actively participated in the episodes as recorded. If this publication is instrumental in renewing an old friendship, reviving a close comradeship, or recalling the memory of hardships and hazards which have cemented our association, it will then have served its purpose. With a single objective we have devoted a portion of our lives to the country's welfare in carrying to a successful conclusion the greatest war in all history. The 13th Airborne Division has been characterized by the pride of its members in their service, faithfully rendered, and in the individual accomplishments of our comrades.

As years roll by these memories, aided by this written record, will be more highly prized and deeply cherished.

To each man of the 13th Airborne Division who has played his part and carried his share of the responsibilities entrusted to our unit, this book will serve as a token reminder of the past and a criterion of obligations of citizenship to be upheld in the future.

Here we render a parting salute to our flag and to our active military association together under the sign of the unicorn.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE 13th AIRBORNE DIVISION

ITS ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT... EARLY DAYS...
GLANCES AT THE TRIALS AND EXPERIENCES
THAT LEAD TO ITS PRESENT POSITION,
COMPLEMENTED BY MANY VIVID
ILLUSTRATIONS THAT RECALL AN INTERESTING PAST.

THE USE of Airborne troops in modern warfare won the interest of military strategists after the development of the parachute following World War I. However, for over a decade such tactics were in an experimental phase and were frankly regarded as a novelty. Likewise the use of the glider for military purposes was not considered feasible until the proponents of the use of airpower in Germany took advantage of so-called sailplanes to build up a reserve of qualified airmen. Methods of warfare change and man's imagination is eager to accept the challenge, to prove his supremacy with new equipment and techniques. At the outset of World War II in 1939 the nations of the world were ill-prepared for the onslaught of Hitler's "Blitzkrieg." Highly trained, fast moving troops, already masters of the rapid breakthrough, envelopment, and encirclement, now introduced the third dimensional envelopment by parachute and glider, proved their capabilities on the island of Crete and used them with devastating effect as the Nazi juggernaut smashed across the Dutch lowlands.

The United States had long considered the possibilities of Airborne tactics and had, in a small way, experimented with Airborne techniques. When the need became apparent the groundwork had already been laid for future growth. Airborne units were organized in skeleton form and were quickly filled with intelligent volunteers of outstanding physical ability. Training programs were outlined and men of vision rose above the lack of precedent to carry forth this new concept of military mobility. Their ideas did not always meet with instantaneous approval but their unfailing efforts were the foundation for one of the most brilliant and successful arms of the American army.

AS PART of the general program of Airborne expansion the 13th Airborne Division was activated on Friday the 13th of August, 1943. The colors were presented to the Division's first Commander, Brigadier General George W. Griner, by the Fort Bragg Post Commander, Brigadier General J. T. Kennedy, Major General Elbridge G. Chapman, Commanding General of the Airborne Command and one of the pioneers in Airborne development, addressed the assembled cadre and distinguished visitors. Airborne troops were already making history on the battlefronts of the world and a great future was predicted for this, the youngest of a new but honored family. From throughout the nation came messages offering best wishes and encouragement to the officers and men of the new 13th.

It was but a few months later that the Division sustained a distinct loss when General Griner left to assume command of the 98th Infantry Division and took with him his Chief of Staff, Colonel Richard P. Ovenshine. But the 13th was honored to welcome as its new Commander, General Chapman, whose efforts with the Airborne since its earliest days were widely known and whose words had keynoted the activation ceremonies such a short time before.

IN DECEMBER the first Airborne Infantry unit organized in this country became part of the Division, absorbing the 190th Glider Infantry. This organization was Colonel Joseph A. Hinton's command, the 88th, which had been founded by General Chapman at Fort Benning in October of 1941. At the same time another proud unit, the 326th Glider Infantry Regiment under Colonel William O. Poindexter, joined the Division and absorbed the 189th. The 189th and 190th had been part of the Division, as cadre, since activation day.

The first week of 1944 found the Division moving to Camp Mackall to inaugurate a training program. The 88th, already an experienced regiment, went to the Pinehurst-Aberdeen area to participate in maneuvers against the 17th Airborne Division. This was the first of many problems and maneuvers which the 13th was to be a part before its shipment overseas.

In March of 1944, the 513th Parachute Infantry Regiment left the 13th to join the 17th Airborne Division in Tennessee. Several months later the 17th was to go overseas and the 513th made a name for itself in European combat. They were replaced as the Division's jump regiment by the 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment, which soon after highlighted the visit of Under-Secretary of War Robert Patterson with a regimental jump.

The late Lieutenant General Lesley J. McNair, to whom this book is dedicated, inspected and put his stamp of approval on the 13th in June of '44. While he was with the Division on his tour of inspection, General McNair presented the Division's first Expert Infantry Badges.

A group of officers was selected from the Division in July to form the staff of the First Allied Airborne Task Force which was to launch the successful Airborne invasion of Southern France a month later.

In September, field exercises were held, followed by full-scale Airborne maneuvers that were to be the last test before combat. In spite of difficult conditions and the unfamiliar situations encountered, Army Ground Forces observers pronounced the entire tactical operation a success.

"We had been building up to these maneuvers for a long time. We had sweated out preliminary problems and had our share of tough times—glider accidents—wearying night problems—getting lost in swamps—to say the least, we hoped the big maneuver would come off better than some of the jobs we had pulled in preparation. The take-off day arrived and we carried out the 'get ready' routine that we were to become so familiar with later on in Europe. The first serials left the airfield in total darkness and by the time I hit the ground the illusion of reality was as complete as it could be without an actual enemy. We were just getting organized in the drop zone when a C-47 lit up the sky with a trail of flame and crashed so close to me that I could feel the impact. Of course, the maneuver was just a large-scale repetition of things we had done so often that they were almost second nature, but that flaming C-47 was the milestone for me of one phase completed and another more difficult one about to begin. 'Guadalmackall' with its tarpaper barracks and oceans of sand was behind us."

The next assignment was to prepare the 13th for shipment to Europe. Replacements swelled the units to full strength, equipment was packed in readiness for the alert and all qualifications for overseas movement were met. The alert finally was received and the Division entrained for Camp Shanks. Soon after arrival there, the final alert was given and the 13th embarked on the 20th of January, 1945, for "ports unknown."

The Division was ready for combat and expected to be committed to battle soon after its arrival in Europe. While the complete defeat of Von Rundstedt's Armies in Belgium had not been accepted, the tide of battle was turning and an Allied counter-offensive was expected. Just where this drive would be was not known, but the men of the 13th were confident that they would be in on the final push across France, into Germany and on to Berlin.

"The Nazis last stand in Belgium seemed to be losing strength today, but in certain sectors the situation appeared to be still critical. News at this time is incomplete but latest communiques seem to indicate that . . . the Russian drive toward the Oder moved up on a wide front today and military experts stated that unless the Nazis had a reserve force not yet in evidence . . ." This was the radio news that sped us on our way to the ETO. We knew that there were Airborne guys in the Bulge and we knew that they were hard pressed in places. It certainly didn't look as if they were rolling out the velvet carpet and 'welcome' mat for us. Our trip over was like most of the hundreds of other convoys that crossed the Atlantic during the war. The things that concerned us most were the reports from Europe, the daily rumors about 'falling barometer' and the hourly latrine-o-grams concerning 'a man overboard on one of the other ships.' Just after dark one night we met a hospital ship headed Stateside and, in a rather grim way, that brought home the realization that this was not a pleasure cruise."

THE FIRST sight of land after leaving New York was a glimpse of the fog-shrouded coast of Southern England near Portsmouth. Soon after, the Division reached the port of Le Havre at the mouth of the Seine River. The city and particularly the harbor area had been severely damaged by bombing and the Division was given its first view of the havoc and destruction they were to see in other parts of France and that some were to see in Germany.

"The thing that I remember about the landing at Le Havre was right after I got off the boat. I'd just stepped off the gangplank into the mud on the dock when I turned around to spot a buddy. I saw him all right just as he slipped under the weight of his duffle bag to fall flat on his face in that mud. He was really a mess and the tough part about it was that he was to wear those same clothes all the way to Lucky Strike."

"The trip to Lucky Strike was a tedious journey. It was only 35 or 40 miles but the French railroads run on a philosophy all their own. Counting stops for the engineer to talk with his friends, it took us 17 hours."

"Most of the time at Lucky Strike was spent in chow lines and trying to keep warm. There was only one chow line for the whole division and it was a column of fours that extended as far as you could see. We would just about finish breakfast and it would be time to line up for dinner. It rained every day and from the look of the place it had been carrying on like that for weeks. I remember trying to keep my tent dry. I borrowed some gravel off the walks, threw in some straw, put down a layer of cardboard and topped it off with some boards, but you would never have known I'd done a thing. The mud was still ankle deep. We finally got to the point where we couldn't lace up our boots. We would just leave them in our galoshes and wear them that way."

From Camp Lucky Strike, the 13th's initial staging area, the Division was assigned to the XVIII Airborne Corps, commanded by Major General Matthew B. Ridgway. Units proceeded by train to Sens, Auxerre and Joigny, bases south of Paris on the Yonne River. It was during this period that the 517th Combat Team joined the Division and were quartered at Joigny. This team, composed of the 517th Parachute Infantry, 460th Parachute Field Artillery Battalion and the 569th Parachute Engineer Company, had already achieved an excellent combat record in Italy, Southern France and the "Bulge." As veterans they were a welcome addition to an otherwise untried Division that was momentarily expecting assignment to a combat mission.

"I drove for the old man; he got around quite a bit. The three little cities, Auxerre, Joigny, and Sens became quite familiar to me as we traveled up and down the valley of the Yonne. I saw the same things you did and I'll bet none of us ever forget the bustling market places on Monday mornings. People headed for home with a couple of loaves of long bread, pinching off a bite now and then as they scurried along. Bicycles everywhere. Clatter of wooden soled shoes. Two-wheeled carts rumbling over the cobbles with Andre nodding sleepily atop the load."

"Remember the park by the river where some of us used to promenade? I recall the narrow streets of the village and the second floor balconies. Heaven had to help the unwary G. I. who chanced below when the dishwater was coming down. And, of course, the old landmarks. The clock gate in Auxerre, the massive towers of the cathedral in Sens, the bridge at Joigny where you could stand and watch the housewives flail the laundry clean upon the rocks of the river."

"Everybody had his own favorite bistro and cafe where the vin rouge tasted a little better. We all found new friends among these people—the kids who got our chewing gum, the girls who came dancing, the hardened patriots of the underground, the bearded patriarchs."

"Here we were often invited into the homes of the French people and we were grateful. I will always remember France as I knew it in the pleasant valley of the Yonne River."

Assignment of a combat mission to the 13th was not long in coming. When the 517th joined the Division a new table of organization was drawn up which called for the amalgamation of the 326th and 88th Glider Infantry Regiments. Three weeks after this change was carried out, the strengthened Division was alerted for "Varsity," an operation calling for a drop near Wesel, Germany, with the U. S. 17th and the British 6th Airborne Divisions. Many long hours of preparation and planning were finally written off to experience when the participation of the 13th was cancelled due to insufficient air lift.

★ ★ ★

NOTHER alert came through for "Choker II" and the operational planning went on without a break. This operation called for the establishment of a bridgehead on the east bank of the Rhine near Worms, Germany, to support the offensive of the 45th and 3d Infantry Divisions of the U. S. Seventh Army. Morale within the Division reached an all-time high and the men were convinced that this time they were on their way. However, General Patton's 3rd Army in its spectacular drive through the German line along the Moselle River successfully reached the Rhine at Worms and the resultant changes in Allied strategy precluded commitment of the 13th in the "Choker" operation.

Within a short time five great Allied armies crossed the Rhine and the Russians were at the gates of Berlin. The Wehrmacht in its retreat was being reduced to a shambles on both fronts and Nazi leaders desperately sought means to salvage something from the wreckage of the fallen empire.

Attention of the Allied High Command was focused on the Bavarian Alps where the Nazi hierarchy was reportedly preparing to entrench itself in a "National Redoubt" for a final stand. At this time the 13th was alerted for operation "EFFECTIVE" in which, as part of the U. S. 7th Army, they were to assist in the denying of this reported stronghold to the Germans. As a surprise element the Division was to seize target towns and certain designated German leaders.

The Division moved to marshalling areas at airfields in Northern France. Extensive preparations were made, the Division was briefed, and again everything was placed in readiness for H-hour. The overland party was sent into Germany—the men were at the airfields waiting to board the planes when the news was flashed that the 1st French Army had broken through the Black Forest changing the situation to the extent that the mission of the 13th was no longer necessary.

"We were lined up for chow about 5 o'clock one morning in the marshalling area when someone behind me said, 'President Roosevelt's dead.' The guy in front of me said, 'Yeah, and the Japs just landed in 'Frisco.' 'No bull,' this Joe behind me said, 'They heard it on the radio.' We didn't believe it at first, there were so many rumors going the rounds and it just didn't seem possible that the man who had planned the whole thing could be dead before the finish. In the backs of our minds we'd thought of him carrying it through to get what we were fighting for and we didn't want to believe that he was gone. But, it seemed we'd almost forgotten about it in a few days. We had many things to do, loading clips, cleaning weapons, writing home, and all the other details of preparation for a combat operation, so that events in other parts of the world seemed relatively unimportant."

Just prior to the final collapse in Germany, elements of the 13th were scheduled to be part of a 1st Allied Airborne Army mission to Copenhagen, Denmark. Existing weather conditions curtailed this operation and the Division, until the war's end, continued as SHAEF reserve.

"I was in Paris when the news of the German surrender was announced officially. We'd known about it back at the base for several days but we'd held off on the celebrating until it was official. I guess a lot of people must have had advance news because when I got to the city the streets were jammed. I wanted to get to the Arc de Triomphe but the Champs Elysees was so crowded I didn't have a chance. About three o'clock the news everybody was waiting for was announced over loudspeakers and the city went wild. At first there was a storm of paper from the windows and a melee of noises impossible to describe. Airplanes of all descriptions, from artillery observation cubs to four-engine bombers, were flying over the city. I remember a P-51 that buzzed the avenue at tree-top height and then banked around the Arc. People began snake dancing along the avenue; in and out of cafes, around trees, through fountains, everywhere; shouting 'Vive la France! Vive les Allies! Vive les Americans!' On the side streets every conceivable kind of vehicle; jeeps, trucks, horse-drawn taxis, were careening around filled with laughing screaming people and flags of all the allied nations fluttered from balconies and windows. This day meant the end of long years of war and hateful occupation for these people and they were making the most of the hour of victory. I had to go back to the base about 10 o'clock and on the way we passed through several French towns where we had to thread our way through impromptu celebrations and street dances. All told, it was a night to long remember."

With the news of Allied Victory the 13th Airborne returned to its stations in the department of Yonne to await further orders. It was announced that the Division would be redeployed to the Pacific Theater to participate in the invasion of Japan. Reports in "Stars and Stripes" stated that the 13th was scheduled to sail for Japan in November with a stopover in the States between theaters.

While awaiting official orders the men of the Division were given the opportunity to visit London, the Riviera and some of the battle areas near Worms, Germany, and Metz, France.

"After VE-Day some of us got over to Germany to see some of the battle areas and the places we would have been fighting if 'Choker II' had gone through. A couple of us went one day to the village that would have been our objective. We saw a rough copy of the Nazi underground symbol nailed to a tree when we hit the edge of town and we began to feel uneasy. Then as we mosied in toward the main drag people gave us the cold stare, a hush would drop over a group chatting on a street corner and the place had the air of a tomb. There were a few walls or maybe a couple of floors of a big building left in the main section of town. Largely the architectural splendor, if any, of this Kraut hamlet was caved into the cellars and piled up at the curbs. We felt anything but comfortable walking through that town. Finally, when a fraulein came wheeling around a corner on her bicycle, saw us, and turned around to take off in the other direction, we'd had enough. We turned around, too, and walked away.

"Another town we hit was more cheerful, though. The kids came out and gathered around us, asking for candy, and babbling away a mile a minute. We went into a bar for a beer and the fraulein in charge started talking to us right away. She said she'd had a brother in the army who'd been killed in the 'Bulge.' I said I'd lost a buddy in the same mess and it gave me the feeling we had something in common 'til I remembered the SS ring on my finger and the dead Kraut it had come from."

News was released late in July that the Division departure date was set for August and all personnel were ordered to return to their bases. At this time a reshuffling of men under the point system was effected. Men with service in two theaters were transferred to the 82nd Airborne Division, and high-point men were sent to the 17th. Concurrently a large body of low-point men from the 17th brought the Division to a strength of 15,000.

The 13th moved to Camp Pittsburgh in the Reims Assembly Area for the processing necessary for redeployment. There were numerous inspections and all the equipment to pack again. The news of the first atomic bomb reached the Division while at Pittsburgh. The Division wondered, with the rest of the world, about the implications of this new destructive weapon but the particular concern was with its possible effect on redeployment. With the Russian entry into the Japanese War 8 August, '45, anxiety increased as to whether the Division would really be going home.

"When we left Camp Pittsburgh for the staging area near Le Havre the guys were all wondering whether we would really get on those ships. Every time the train stopped there were shouts out the windows, 'is the war over yet?'—'what's the news from the Pacific?' At one station there was a newsdealer. He sold his papers so fast it must have made his head swim. The papers were read quickly; they didn't tell us what we wanted to know. The rumors were as thick as leaves in the fall but they only increased the tension, nobody knew what to believe. The invasion of Japan was still hanging over our heads when we shipped out. Except for a few, the official news of the surrender came over the ship's radio."

The men of the Division reached various ports on the eastern seaboard of the United States in the latter part of August, 1945, and were sent to distribution centers near their homes for furlough. When the 13th arrived in the States the plan was for the Division to continue to the Pacific for occupation duties. However, by the time the men returned to Fort Bragg, North Carolina, these plans were cancelled by the War Department. At the time of writing the Division is gradually readjusting itself to peacetime functioning at Fort Bragg.

Although some individual units of the 13th Airborne Division distinguished themselves in battle, the Division as a whole was withheld from combat in the European Theater of Operations, and the abrupt end of the Japanese War precluded use of the Division in the Pacific. What the future holds to fulfill the early promise of the 13th is more than anyone can say. It is certain that the importance of Airborne tactics and the value of Airborne units was decisively proved in the crucial stages of World War II. The refinement of Airborne technique will necessarily continue and in future years the men of the 13th Airborne Division will look with pride at their contributions to the development of this important chapter in America's military history.

HHEADQUARTERS Special Troops was activated at Auxerre, France, on 1 March, 1945 with four officers and seven enlisted men. It remained stationed at Auxerre, until the movement of the 13th Airborne Division for redeployment to the Pacific Theater at which time it was transferred from Auxerre to Camp Pittsburgh, France, thence to Camp Philip Morris, France. The unit arrived at Camp Shanks, New York, on the 22d of August 1945 and was finally transferred back to Fort Bragg, North Carolina, the former station of the 13th Airborne Division.

THE 13th Airborne Division's Headquarters and Headquarters Company was formed at Fort Bragg, North Carolina around a nucleus of one hundred and fifty cadre men from the 78th "Lightning" Division. After the Company had taken their qualifying glider flights the news came that we were moving to a new home at Camp Mackall, North Carolina. We arrived at Camp Mackall the morning after fire had destroyed our new home area and the Company remained on the Main Post until other arrangements could be made.

A short time later the Company initiated its thorough and intensive training program. During May of '44, the Company and Division Headquarters were ordered to conduct a CPX problem at Camp AP Hill in Virginia for the purpose of gaining experience in field operation of a divisional headquarters. The problem consisted of defense of the CP and the operation of the Division Headquarters with higher echelons. A sidelight of the Virginia trip was a pleasure trip to Washington. Following the end of the CPX the unit returned to Camp Mackall and began to look forward to coming maneuvers. The Division's maneuvers occurred during September of '44. After three days of "sweating it out" at the Laurinburg-Maxton Air Base, Headquarters and Headquarters Company took off and participated in the air movement phase. Next came the ground phase in which all personnel participated. With maneuvers completed we returned again to Camp Mackall to prepare for the ultimate mission of going overseas and being committed to combat.

February found the Division in France. A brief stop over in the "Sea of Mud," Camp Lucky Strike, broke our trip to Auxerre. Auxerre wasn't all ease and luxury either. Soon various sections and units of the Company started work on our missions, both in Auxerre and later at A-48 Airfield near Paris. With all missions ultimately cancelled and V-E Day history, the Company returned to Auxerre in May and took part in the Division's recreation program.

In July the Company received the news that we were returning to the States, perhaps enroute to the Pacific. The 22nd of August 1945 will never be forgotten by the men of the Company, when at 2300 the first outline of the United States coast line was sighted. With the welcome we received as we sailed up the Hudson River, we knew we were home in the greatest country in the world.

Upon our return and during furloughs some of the men were soon separated from the service. The remainder of us reassembled at Fort Bragg, the same Post where Headquarters and Headquarters Company had its beginning.

THE M. P. Platoon of the 13th Airborne Division, which was activated with the division, was small until March 1944 when, by the influx of ASTP men, it was increased to thirty-three men. Its duties were manifold, however, entailing town and traffic patrols and security measures.

During the maneuvers of September 1944, the platoon had its first real test of handling traffic under difficult conditions having to be virtual encyclopedias of information concerning the whereabouts of units. This proved to be difficult in view of the Air Corps' unusual method of spreading men all over Western North Carolina.

On January 26, 1945, the M. P. Platoon sailed from New York and in due time we disembarked at Le Havre, France. On February 16, the platoon joined other units of the division in Auxerre, France, where our new headquarters were set up in the town's museum. Duties were varied, ranging from guarding the divisions TOP SECRETS to patrolling the network of roads among the towns of Sens, Joigny, Auxerre, Chablis, and Tonnerre.

During the first days of April, the platoon moved to an American air-strip near Arpajon, France. Here the platoon waited—eating steaks, bathing in the sun, going to Paris 15 miles distant, and listening to innumerable rumors until orders finally came. The road-tail of the unit piled into their jeeps and set out for Germany. They reached Heilbronn, Germany, before word of the mission being cancelled reached them.

Soon after this, V-E day came and then a very unfortunate young citizen, George Manus became our "hard luck" champion with a critical score of 84 points.

About May 15 the unit once more reassembled at Auxerre to resume routine duties. In July Sergeant Alan Hack and Pfc. Bill Caufield proved in a division elimination tournament to be among the best golfers in the 13th. Cpl. Bill Kennedy, whose pitching record for the champion Division team was eight wins and no losses, added to the platoon's laurels. Soon, without too much reluctance, we prepared to go home with the other units of the Division and pay our joyous respects to the "Traffic cop with the torch" in New York Harbor.

As we review our experiences with the "Lucky 13th" we are thankful for our association with the Division and proud that we were able to contribute to the smooth functioning of its plans.

THE 13th Airborne Division Band is the outgrowth of the merger of two Ground Forces Bands, both of which were serving the Division at Camp Mackall. The 274th AGF Band was the first to be redesignated 13th Airborne Division Band. The 274th served with the 36th Division in World War I. In April 1944 the band was relieved from assignment to 2nd Army, and was assigned to XIII Corps, to be stationed at Camp Mackall. Upon arrival at Camp Mackall, the group was attached to 13th Airborne Division.

The 13th Airborne Division Artillery Band was activated at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, 15 May 1942, as 339th Infantry Band, 85th Division. In July 1943 the group moved to Fort Bragg to form the nucleus for the Artillery Band of the 13th Airborne Division. The Division Artillery Band moved to Camp Mackall with 13th Airborne Division in January, 1944, and until March of 1944 it served the Division, along with the Band of 513th Parachute Infantry. With the departure of the 513th Band in March 1944, the Division Artillery Band was the only Band in the Division, and was therefore called upon to serve the Infantry Regiments as well as Division Artillery, until the arrival of the 274th Band, 27 April 1944.

In August of 1944, Chief Warrant Officer Allan T. Baggett was awarded the Legion of Merit by Major General Chapman. CWO Baggett had been recommended for the award by General Kreuger in recognition of his outstanding achievement as a band leader as shown by the band's excellent record.

Upon departing for the Port of Embarkation, the Band was the last group to leave, having remained behind to furnish music for the departure of the entire Division, and finally furnishing farewell music for the group with which they were to move. When the day for embarkation arrived, the process was reversed—we were the first group to embark, in order to be on hand to play for the remainder of the troops to ship with them. During the voyage, members of the band spent much of their time maneuvering instruments through the passageways of a ship, in order to play concerts on deck and to have jam sessions for the men in the compartments and for the officers and men in the messes. Between digging paths, garbage dumps, and other items of necessity and convenience at Camp Lucky Strike, the Band played concerts in all of the areas in which the Division was stationed. We settled in Joigny and were attached to the newly arrived 517th Infantry Regiment. The Band then initiated a program of furnishing music in the three major cities in which the Division was located, in addition to trying to take care of smaller units which were located in smaller towns surrounding these cities. Concerts, parades, reviews, Bastille Day celebrations, dances, parties, receptions, shows, and decorations kept the group busy seven days a week. Wherever the band appeared, the French civilians became enthusiastic—the younger generation following the dance bands, the older times attending Sunday afternoon concerts, and the entire populace turning out for any parade or review which had any military pageantry and military music connected with it.

Upon receipt of orders to prepare to enter combat, we were assigned duty with supply sections. During the stay in marshalling areas, the Band sent small groups to play in the various airfields where troops were stationed, in addition to taking larger groups to play for field days. The fame of the organization spread chiefly through the efforts of the dance band, and an invitation to play at the Red Cross Club in Versailles was soon forthcoming. This was followed by two very successful appearances at the Stage Door Canteen in Paris, for which a commendation was received from the Director of the Canteen. The entire Band made two trips to play for ceremonies of the First Allied Airborne Army, with subsequent commendations from General Brereton and General Parks. Shortly before departing from France, a unit from the Band was assigned to XVI Corps for several days to furnish entertainment in conjunction with the Corps Swimming Meet.

Because of its enviable record as a musical organization and in view of the splendid disciplinary record, the Band was awarded the Meritorious Service Unit Plaque in June of 1945.

The final appearances of the Band before demobilization wrought its ravages were at Camp Pittsburgh. During the stay there, the Band played for reviews and presentations of decorations, and furnished music for parties and dances. Upon departure from Pittsburgh, most of the instruments were packed for shipment to the Assembly Area in the States. Only enough instruments for jam sessions were left available for the return voyage, and for the first three days, even the instruments were seasick. Eventually, however, all recovered, and the usual evening sessions became SOP.

Of those who served so faithfully with the Band, only a few now remain in service. To those who are no longer with us and whose efforts have given the Band the record it now has, the ones remaining offer their sincere thanks.

222nd MEDICAL COMPANY

FORMER COMMANDERS

Major Myron G. Howle July 1943—October 1945

Captain Charles E. Erikson October 1945—Present
Cavalier, North Dakota

In July, 1943, the cadre arrived from Camp Butner to organize the 222nd Medical Co., which was activated with the 13th Airborne Division, and immediately thereafter a series of basic training cycles was inaugurated. By January, when the unit moved to Camp Mackall, the men had completed three periods of basic, and on a clear day the sound of creaking bones could be heard for miles around. On the night of 15 Jan. 44, "the coldest in the recorded annals of the Sunny South," the high command shifted the company to Camp Mackall in a lightning move. If we hadn't put stump juice in the radiator the jeeps would have frozen. Twenty minutes after our arrival, when the Guadalmackall Beachhead had been firmly secured, cries of "Basic Training", "Basic Training", rent the frigid air and off we went on the old merry-go-round again.

In April and May the company finally became airborne, having learned to load and lash in their sleep. When the time came for our first glider flight, there was a mad rush for jump school. When the jumpers came back, the rush was for passes and furloughs, as there was a lot of shining boots and wings clamoring for civilian attention.

Shortly after this we became the 222nd Auxiliary Engineers; we re-landscaped the company area, creating two lakes and several canals. After every rain the Mess Sergeant did a thriving business ferrying customers to and from the mess hall.

On 25 Sept. 1944, an epidemic of dysentery, trench mouth, hives, barber's itch, and emergencies at home hit the company, and one could plainly see that it was maneuver time. As medics, we prescribed a C. C. pill, an aspirin, or both for these assorted ailments, and took off for the pine trees and sand.

About this time overseas shipment was imminent, so G-3 quickly slipped in another session of basic. The idea was to Separate The Men From The Boys, but when the final returns were in, where could you get a new company in a hurry? Fully hep to malaria discipline, jungle training, judo, and conditioned by a steady rice diet from our mess hall, we got the big picture on the South Pacific and promptly took off for the E. T. O. At this point we felt reasonably ready for anything, having been trained, respectively, as medical aid men, drivers, ambulance orderlies, dental technicians, clerks, medical and surgical assistants, cooks, and litter bearers.

Lined up at Auxerre France for Trip to Camp Pittsburgh

Field Hospital in Old Chateau

Arriving in France, and having been without basic training for almost two months, it was decided that a nice, brisk walk in the clear, French twilight would be just the thing. If there is anything we bring back to tell our grandchildren, it's the gruesome details of that sixteen-mile march from Auxerre to Toucy. Only the unflagging spirit of Major Howle going ceaselessly back and forth along the ranks, exhorting his men to give it that extra something, carried us on. Our only worry was that the Major with his tireless cruising to and fro would eventually run out of petrol for his putt-putt.

About 1 April 1945 we moved to the marshalling area, expecting at any moment to be awakened for that 4 A. M. steak breakfast. But while SHAEF was crying "Wolf", the boys were acting the part in Orleans, Chateaudun, and Gay Paree. When Germany surrendered on 8 May, we returned to the woods of Auxerre but left our hearts—or pocketbooks—in Pigalle.

On 12 August, after having done our bit for the Allied cause by staying out of the Third Army's way, we boarded the "Thomas H. Barry", and sailed for the States, enroute to Japan. But V-J day came while we were on the high seas, and after the usual amount of "We go, we don't", we returned to Fort Bragg, where we are wearily contemplating basic training as opposed to civilian life.

The activation of the Division Reconnaissance Platoon began about the first of March, 1945, in Auxerre, France. At that time it consisted of a commanding officer and eight overseas replacements. A chateau, six miles from Auxerre was our "home."

A week later our original staff was augmented by 18 men who were previously affiliated with the Office of Strategic Services on combat duty in Greece, Italy, Yugoslavia, and islands along the Dalmation coast. These men, possessing a wealth of information and technique gained in combat, proved to be an asset of extreme value to our unit. On the 15th of March another group joined the outfit—men from the 153rd Anti-Aircraft Battalion and the 326th Glider Infantry.

By the end of the month we had obtained our equipment and completed our special training for combat. Then it came: A mission across the Rhine had been assigned the 13th! A high spirit of enthusiasm pervaded the outfit. The men were briefed; jeeps loaded with equipment; guns mounted; and combat ammunition issued and then—the mission was shelved!

April found our boys situated in marshalling area, near Chartres, France. Further training was emphasized during our short stay there. Preparations for a new mission near Stuttgart, Germany, were completed. This operation, like the Rhine mission, was cancelled.

Another move was in order for the platoon. We took off to an area located in the vicinity of Chateaudun; and there we remained until V-E Day . . . A day and night that shall live long in our memories. The citizens of Orleans, France, will long remember our celebration with them on the unforgettable eve. Some distinguished themselves in all events, including the swimming meet and high-diving exhibition held in the public square.

Returning to Auxerre, we inherited a new place of abode. The area assigned us was in need of repairs and with much work and cooperation we managed to make it liveable.

On 27 July 1945 we "au revoir-ed" Auxerre and "bon jour-ed" Camp Pittsburgh. Here we picked up 100 men from the 17th Airborne Division who joined us to form a contemplated Cavalry Recon Troop. Our next move took us to Camp Philip Morris for another physical and showdown inspection. Four days later we found ourselves on an Army Troop Transport, the "Thomas H. Barry", heading toward the Pacific via the United States.

The active existence of the 513th Airborne Signal Company began, not on activation day but on the 20 October, 1943, with the arrival of six newly inducted rookies to add to the compliment of 10 cadremen and 4 officers. From this humble beginning gradually evolved the training methods, schools, and policies which were to build the unit into its peak strength, and to prepare it fully for whatever mission it might be assigned.

The stateside history of our unit is similar to that of any airborne group undergoing training. There was a constant influx of personnel, with training and re-training necessary to achieve complete proficiency in the various phases of signal work. This training included CPX's, field problems, and maneuvers. We also had our share of parades, guard duty and KP; promotions occurred and transfers made. The welding of friendships, the final feeling of complete confidence in the unit—and the eagerness to prove that confidence in battle was the feature of our strong company spirit.

Of particular interest in the training period were such events as the parachute and glider qualifications; the A. P. Hill problem, under XIII Corps, in conjunction with the 78th and 100th Divisions. We participated in the greatest airborne maneuvers ever held, and sent special teams to instruct the 84th and 103rd Divisions in airborne tactics. Our company was commended for its proficiency, by the Commanding General, after both A. P. Hill and the maneuvers, and we shared in the commendations accorded the Division by the commanders of the 84th and 103rd Divisions.

The E. T. O. found us handling the entire Division communications; the installing of phones, stringing wire, and maintaining constant switchboard service. Radio nets were operated with Army Corps, Metz and Worms, and the rest camp at Avalon, as well as an air-ground net. A continuous message center operation and teletype service were maintained while we were constantly on the alert and ready for commitment to battle. While there was plenty of work, we also managed to enjoy ourselves after V-E Day. We were saddened by the loss of Tec 5 Phillip Parker, killed in a jeep accident while in the performance of his duties.

The unit returned to the United States aboard the U. S. Army Transport Thomas H. Barry in August, 1945, to begin the cycle of training replacements and anticipating discharges.

Back home at a testimonial dinner, the entire unit gathered to honor Major Puckett as he prepared to leave the service—a testimonial that became not a farewell for one man but a farewell for all the men who had so faithfully served and a criteria of the high esprit of our company.

FORMER COMMANDERS

Captain John B. Hart May 1943—August 1944

Captain Richard S. High .. August 1944—October 1945

Captain Irvin M. Massey October 1945—Present

On the 15th day of May 1943, two officers and eighteen noncoms assembled at Camp Mackall, North Carolina—the nucleus of what was later regarded as the crack 713th Ordnance outfit of the 13th Airborne Division.

During the first few weeks, these original members established company policies, organized shop sections and anxiously awaited the arrival of sixty-seven new inductees. The third week of June saw the organization at prescribed level.

A basic military and technical training program was immediately initiated. The training period lasted thirteen weeks and transition from civilian life to the rugged life of the hardened soldier was apparent. Upon completion of this training program the entire company moved to nearby Fort Bragg where we became an integral part of the newly born 13th Airborne Division.

Upon the company's arrival at Bragg it's primary function was initiated, performing all third echelon maintenance on vehicular and armament equipment within the division. Concurrently, the members of the ordnance company began their airborne training. They soon became expert in loading and lashing of ordnance equipment. The pressure was increased as the day neared for the first glider rides. Also initiated at this time was parachute training with fifty per cent of the organization volunteering to become "jumpers."

The summer months saw the Ordnance Company with all sections operating with speed and efficiency. By fall of '44 the company was put through it's first test: Maneuvers—fox holes, swamps, sandhills, glider movements, parachuting and the moving of sections, supplies, ammunition and equipment by air and by foot. After these maneuvers the Ordnance Company received its first commendation as a result of 2nd Army inspections and was pronounced ready for combat.

719th Ordnance Co. "Group I"

719th Ordnance Co. "Group II"

The 713th shipped with the Division and arrived in Auxerre about a month later. March saw the Company alerted with the Division for the now famous Rhine Mission. We were deployed on a captured German airfield near Chartres, France, where we pitched into the task of preparing all arms and vehicles in the Division for a full scale combat operation. Life at the marshalling area was enviable—movies, good chow, athletics—but underneath it all was the strain and nervousness of sweating out H-Hour. The tension finally broke when the operation was cancelled and the company returned to Auxerre.

The work of the 713th continued until redeployment closed the shops and the company prepared for the trip home. At the staging area in Reims we were again commended, this time by the Assembly Area Command Headquarters for having the finest arms and vehicles of any Division they had inspected.

Our return to Fort Bragg found the Company again involved in reorganization with many replacements arriving to relieve the high pointers. It is the hope of the "old timers" that the new men will maintain the high standards set in past days.

The 409th Airborne Quartermaster Company came into being in May, 1943, as an attachment of the 11th Airborne Division. In July we transferred to Fort Bragg and joined the 13th Airborne Division at the time of its activation.

Upon the completion of basic training, we took tests at Camp Mackall and passed with an excellent record, receiving a commendation from the Division Commander. In the course of the following year, we participated in maneuvers against the 17th Airborne Division, and took intensive training in loading and lashing at Airborne Command School to become qualified glidermen.

In May, the first of three groups of glidermen left for jump school at Fort Benning, Georgia, while two other groups went to Camp Fisher for machine gun school. June found us celebrating our first anniversary with a beer party and U. S. O. show in the Special Troops mess hall. Later that year, two groups left for Camps Claiborne and Howze to train the men of the 84th and 103rd Divisions in loading and lashing, receiving high commendation for their instruction from the commanding generals of both divisions.

On our trip overseas, occasional sessions by the division jive band and target practice by the naval gunners enlivened the days spent en route. We "sojourned" at Lucky Strike before entraining for the small town of Brienon, where we were billeted in French houses and received much attention as no other troops were stationed there.

Many of the famous cities of France, Belgium, and Germany were visited by our men, for in picking up supplies our work took us to Lille, Rheims, St. Quentin, Lyon, Chalons, Brussels, Worms, Metz, and Paris. At one time reports were forwarded that German agents were attempting to hamper our ration convoys, and armed guards rode our supply line. In Brienon, escaping PW's, in a mixed American uniform, were thwarted by the efforts of two alert QM GI's, whose quick thinking brought them into custody of division intelligence agents.

One company member, Frank Pellerin, was killed and others wounded by a mine explosion in Metz, and our camp near Brienon was named Camp Pellerin in his honor.

Remember griping about redeployment to the Pacific and hoping that we would go to Tokyo via Home-town, USA? We all sweated out the atomic bomb and its consequences, not knowing whether we would ship state-side or not. By the time we finally boarded the Georgetown Victory, no one complained as we pulled the KP details on the way back. No, not after such a close shave.

Forty of us who reformed back at Fort Bragg as a nucleus for reorganization salute the former members now in civilian clothes, and wish them the best of luck.

The 13th Parachute Maintenance Co. was organized in February, 1944, under the name of The Provisional Parachute Maintenance Co. It was during those days, while the fate of the company was yet a question mark, that the company completed the hard work of keeping up with rigorous packing schedules, the always difficult task of satisfying the whims of everyone, keeping field tents and equipment up to the latest official alterations. Official recognition of the company's hard work and the efficient and expeditious way in which the work was handled came in October, 1944, when Division Special Troops welcomed its newest member, The 13th Parachute Maintenance Co.

But it has not been all work and no play for the men in the company. About every two months we were the happy recipients of a day of rest at which time we would toss off an enormous repast and laze through an evening of gaiety. Following these periodic celebrations we would again be ready to face our work and accept our fates with soldierly philosophy.

Of all the units in the division the parachute riggers are perhaps the best qualified to chart the swamps of North Carolina. This knowledge, not easily gained, is the result of many days and hours spent searching the countryside for the chute-strewn areas where troopers had done their "precision" unloading after being brought over a dank black swamp by the "unerring" Air Corps. It was on one of these chute retrieving jaunts that our first Company Commander, Lt. Vukomanovich, was injured and lost to the company when the L-5 in which he was spotting lost chutes cracked up.

Before we left for overseas, a quickie was pulled somewhere along the line and we were able to dump all the parachute equipment on the various outfits of the division. This was indeed a lifesaver as we were swamped with work as things stood. The dire manpower situation was alleviated by the influx of new blood from The Parachute School. They were quickly won over to our ways of wit and wisdom. The seafaring members of our unit were able to test their sea legs on our next journey. It turned out that not very many of the boys had sea legs. The food situation on the trip was quite drastic. It was very difficult to catch up with the food and then once it was apprehended, it was more difficult to get it down and keep it down. It was indeed a joyous day for many when we ploughed into the devastated harbor of Le Havre.

After debarking in the wee hours of the morning, our first military accomplishment was to get lost in the winding rubble of that city in search of our new and temporary homes. After much confusion and wandering about, we followed a stray dog to our encampment.

Soon we holed up at Camp Brown, a former German Concentration Camp, where a number of men from the 517th Combat Team and the 509th Parachute Infantry joined us to bolster our morale and confidence with their "know-how."

After working like fiends to complete the packing, repairing and modification of 40,000 parachutes for the expected missions, we were all chagrined to have things called off. But we drowned our disappointment in Gay Paree, as we were fortunate enough to get to this fair city quite often. Even in quaint Auxerre the fellows managed to find occasional merriment at the Blue Goose, our rendezvous on the Yonne.

With the cessation of hostilities, Parachute Maintenance Company gained their first opportunity to participate in organized athletics. Despite much enthusiasm, no one was injured seriously.

The return to the States followed closely the familiar pattern of the trip over, and the riggers were elated to at last arrive in New York Harbor.

153rd ABN AA BATTALION

TO: The Officers and Men of the 153d Airborne Anti-Aircraft Battalion.

It gives me great pleasure to have this opportunity to express to you all my deepest appreciation for the energetic, conscientious and skillful manner in which, over a period of over two and a half years you have built up and maintained an organization in the United States Army whose standards are second to none.

To all members of this Battalion, both past and present, my heartiest greetings and best wishes. Well done—keep it up!

Very sincerely yours,

Harry R. Hale

HISTORY OF THE 153rd AIRBORNE ANTI-AIRCRAFT BATTALION

Born at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, August 13, 1945, satellite of the 13th Airborne Division, and commanded by Lt. Col. Harry R. Hale, the 153rd Airborne Anti-Aircraft Battalion, started its existence with a cadre of enlisted men from the 479th Coast Artillery (AA) Battalion and the Enlisted Cadre Pool both of Camp Davis, North Carolina and officer personnel from various Anti-Aircraft Training Camps across the nation.

Cross country conditioning marches and hours of gun drill marked the first period of training in the midst of which we became an airborne unit and were introduced to the CG-4A Glider. In the fall our strength increased as inductees from New England arrived and still later we received a share of the men released from colleges in accordance with the War Department policy to augment Army Ground Forces. Moving with the division to Camp Mackall we received the 656th, 657th and 658th AAA Machine Gun Batteries from Camp Stewart, Georgia, and reaching our full strength were ready for the arduous days of training which confronted us—AA 50 caliber firing at Fort Fisher, North Carolina—Airborne training at Pope Field, North Carolina—for some, parachute training at Fort Benning, Georgia.

Interspersed were a series of command inspections, reviews for high dignitaries, the Lumberton area Air-Ground maneuver, and finally, the last P. O. M. hurdle, shakedown by the Inspector General. It suffices that in both administration and training the 153rd received a high rating in the Division.

January, 1945 and the tempo of activity increased, countless equipment checks, to the medics for shots, the dentist for fillings, packing and unpacking A bags and B bags, the train, the cavernous pier, gang plank, transport, cold, lonely ocean, heads and holds, landfall at shattered, battered Le Havre, 40 and 8's, Auxerre, our home on the Continent.

In a striking flag raising ceremony attended by French dignitaries, Lt. Col. Hale took over our new post and named it Camp Brown in honor of Pfc. Melvin Brown who died at Camp Mackall of wounds received in training.

On March 1, 1945, the Battalion underwent partial reorganization. Batteries A, B and C were armed with British Six Pounders and received new prime movers. Battery D was armed with 24, 50 caliber machine guns. Batteries E and F were designated parachute units and armed with the, then secret and untried, recoilless 57 and 75 mm anti-tank guns. The changes necessitated a heavy training program. At Chateaudun Airport we, aided by the veteran pilots, test loaded CG-4A's, experimented with new equipment and new ideas. The two "jump" batteries, assisted by Ordnance experts, set about mastering their new weapons. Test after test provided convincing proof that the recoilless weapons were aptly named "tank killers."

As the training phase progressed, morale soared, and we reached a new high in efficiency. Thus it was a well knit team that departed for our marshalling area at A-50, near Chateaudun, when the Division was alerted for a combat operation. Here our time was devoted to pre-pairing equipment, hearing security lectures, hoping for a bountiful mail call, and waiting for the next PX ration.

The scheduled operation was scrapped as progress of Allied arms precluded its necessity and on April 19 we returned to Auxerre, less Batteries E and F, which had been previously attached to the 515th and 517th Combat Teams—there to prepare for a land movement to the front. Again the proposed operation was cancelled and normal routine took the place of combat expectancy and preparation.

V-E Day, May 8, 1945, and the lights came on in France again. The cathedral bells clamored joyously and the populace went wild with delight. Auxerre's citizens took us into their homes and brought forth the old French wines, hidden and guarded carefully through the long, dark days of the German occupation. Many the glasses raised as "Vive les Americains," "Vive les Allies" echoed along the narrow streets. The next day we marched in the Victory Parade before the citizens of happy Auxerre.

After V-E Day a period of speculation prevailed. We all became familiar with such slogans as "Mackall in the Fall," "Golden Gate in '48," and "Through the Isthmus by Christmas." The big question—"Would the Division be redeployed directly to the Pacific or via the United States?" Our prayers were answered, we sailed for home on August 12, 1945, aboard the ex-luxury liner, Thomas H. Barry.

We were selected as detail battalion for the voyage which killed the monotony of grey seas. So, a few stormy days weathered, we passed Ambrose Lighthouse in the early morning haze of August 20 and entered New York Harbor. Home at last!

The reception, the furloughs, and the assembly at Fort Bragg, North Carolina followed. Now in retrospect we review our achievements.

The 153rd is proud of the men who comprised it. Proud of the efforts expended and the results achieved in training, the good judgment and high standards of conduct displayed at all times. Our record would receive the highest acclaim of any leader. We salute our brothers in arms whose prowess on the Western Front forestalled our entry into combat but deep within us is the certain knowledge that tempered in the crucible of battle we would unquestionably have carried the proud name of the 153rd to great heights.

Melvin Brown

MELVIN M. BROWN

We herein honor the memory of Private First Class Melvin M. Brown, who became the 153d's only fatal casualty. He died as a result of a wound received while running a combat course with overhead fire at Camp Mackall, N. C.

Melvin was one of the best liked and most respected soldiers in this battalion. Many of the original men in the 153d well remember him as a spirited and intelligent soldier. Others of us who knew him more intimately thought of him as a happy, cheerful friend, always ready to do his buddies a favor. His memory lives on, honored by his country, comrades, and friends.

HISTORY OF THE 129th AIRBORNE ENGINEER BN.

On the stroke of noon, the 15th day of July, 1943, the first truck of the convoy rolled through the gates of Fort Bragg. The engineer soldiers clambered down from the trucks, hoisted their bags to their shoulders and marched to their new quarters. The enlisted cadre from the 303rd Combat Engineer Battalion of the 78th "Lightning" Division, had arrived to begin the work of forming the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion, 13th Airborne Division. Two months previously, the War Department had selected eight officers stationed at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, to form the bulk of the officer cadre. While the battalion commander was going through the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, the Fort Belvoir Group was undergoing airborne training at Lauranburg-Maxton Air Base and cadre officer training at Fort Belvoir. During this same period of May to July, 1943, an entire Parachute Engineer Company was being trained at Camp Mackall, N. C. The fusing of these three elements began that hot day in July. The cadre officers were: Battalion Commander, Major (now Lt. Col.) A. A.

Blatherwick; Executive Officer, Captain (now Major) E. C. Wallace; Adjutant, 2nd Lt. (now Captain) R. R. Bird; S-2, S-3, 1st Lt. William Simmons; S-4, 2nd Lt. (now Captain) J. E. Darlington; ADE, Captain (now Major) R. J. Sollenberger; Commanding Co. A, 1st Lt. Arden N. Ballard; Commanding Co. B, 1st Lt. Daniel Webster; and Commanding Co. C, 1st Lt. (now Major)

Phillip Johnson. Among the key non-commissioned officers in the enlisted cadre were Master Sgt. Joseph Strobel; Technical Sgt. William Pritchard, Personnel Sgt.; Technical Sgt. William Beckum, Battalion Supply Sgt.; Technical Sgt. Robert Dodson, Battalion Communication Chief; and Battalion Motor Sgt., S/Sgt. Elmer Kovac. This was an auspicious beginning but full battalion development was retarded because fillers were arriving only intermittently and in small numbers. Slowly from various sources and from all sections of the United States men filtered in. The calibre of the men was extremely high and expertly, albeit, slowly two glider companies and a headquarters and service company were formed and trained.

The 14th day of January was moving day for the battalion. The 129th moved to the North area of Camp Mackall, N. C. Before the personnel of the unit became familiar with their new surroundings, the battalion was moved, a very short distance this time, to the South area of Camp Mackall. It was here the entire division remained until alerted for overseas movement. The battalion was now growing in strength and effectiveness. Training was hard and intensive and the men of the 129th began to look and feel like airborne soldiers. The achievement of professional ability was rather seriously handicapped by the continuing demand on the battalion for overseas replacements in officers and enlisted men. Many Airborne engineer officers who distinguished themselves in combat with other airborne divisions received a great amount of experience and training with the 129th. In March of 1944, many experienced enlisted men and officers were sent to Camp Pickett, Va., to cadre a new airborne battalion. The state of the Nation during the period of January to September, 1944, was reflected in the unit. With the country battling for its very existence, training was intensified on a mounting scale. Officers and men no longer had evenings free. Midnight oil was consumed in company orderly rooms and battalion headquarters, as problems were met and solved, specialist schools were planned and executed. Demolitionists, machine gunners, riggers, carpenters, clerks, cooks, were learning the things necessary to weld the battalion into a professional, hard bitten group of engineer soldiers.

During the month of August, 1944, the 129th conducted a mine school for all units in the division. The results were even better than anticipated with each division unit becoming familiar with the operation and construction of mines and booby traps. Necessary construction work at Camp Mackall, such as reinforced concrete taxiway at the airport and "jump" trainers and platforms for division parachute training was completed by the men of the line companies. The ultimate objective of this hard work and intensive training was the battlefield and the immediate objective was division maneuvers.

The 22nd of September, 1944, the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion moved to the airfield at Lumberton, North Carolina, to marshal for airborne and ground maneuvers. There was an air of expectancy and excitement. Could the battalion in practical hard maneuvers achieve the standards necessary to qualify it for the battlefield?

Three days were consumed in final preparations for loading and dropping men and equipment. Maneuver D-Day arrived and the test was at hand. All types of air transport were used in dropping the battalion. One company being landed by parachute and another by glider, and the remaining company and Headquarters and Service Company being air-landed in C-47's. Assignment of companies was initially normal combat team assignment, and our mission was to prepare and defend a barrier system on all roads leading to the objective, Camp Mac-kall airport. The initial mission completed successfully, the companies reverted to battalion control, and while maintaining and improving the barrier system, other engineer tasks were assigned to the companies. Water supply, bridge building, and reconnaissance were the primary functions during this first week of maneuvers. After three days in a rest area to resupply and regroup, the division entered on the ground phase of its maneuvers. The battalion remained intact during this period, and in addition to its normal engineer functions was employed as reserve for one of the infantry regiments in an attack. At the end of this week, the maneuvers were completed.

Upon completion of maneuvers, officers and enlisted men, tired, dirty, but confident, returned to Camp Mackall. The battalion commander, Lt. Col. Alan G. Blatherwick was transferred at this time and the executive officer, Major Elbert C. Wallace, assumed command. One of the unforgettable happenings of this period was the visit of General George C. Marshall and his talk to the officers of the division at the 326th Officers Club. In November, 1944, the division had been alerted for overseas movement. The movement date was postponed for 60 days, and part of General Marshall's talk was succinct explanation of a War Department change in strategy that necessitated our movement being delayed.

In December, the battalion constructed a series of fortifications in Fort Bragg for a division firing exercise employing all weapons and air support. The task of battalion during this problem was to maintain and repair the fortifications after each day's firing. The battalion mission was extremely successful as none of the well concealed emplacements was hit by either artillery or air bombardment.

On 19th of January 1945, the battalion moved from Camp Mackall, N. C., to Camp Shanks, N. Y., for final processing before embarkation for overseas. At 1900, on the evening of 25 January, 1945, the battalion was marched to the station at Camp Shanks, and proceeded by train to New York, and embarked on the U.S.A.T. George Washington. The crossing of the Atlantic was made safely although many will remember the sub scare at 3 o'clock of the morning of the 5th when the underwater explosion of depth charges propelled by the Y guns of the Navy destroyer escorts could be heard close by. The transport anchored in Portsmouth Harbor, England, and the flat, white roofs of Portsmouth and Smithtown could be clearly seen. The large transport finally came to rest off Le Harve, personnel were transferred from the ships to LCI's, and we were on French soil the 7th of February, 1945. The battalion was detailed on KP during the entire trip but this was not the irksome work usually associated with this type of duty. In fact, many men found the toughest part of the trip was carrying their food-stuffed duffle bags down the gangway. The first impressions of France, or that part of it, known as Camp Lucky Strike, were extremely unpleasant. Mud, with the consistency and adhesion of Southern molasses, covered the entire camp. Unceasing rain further added to our miseries, and we were happy to leave behind the scanty food, the mud, and the cold.

From Camp Lucky Strike, the battalion moved by French boxcars (40 hommes and 8 chevaux) approximately 200 miles SE to the town of Auxerre, France. Upon arrival at Auxerre, the battalion headquarters was stationed in an unoccupied home, and the companies were billeted in chateaux surrounding the town. House-keeping and adaption to new conditions employed the first two weeks, and then training and physical conditioning were resumed. Renewed interest in the war situation on the western front was evidenced, and the morale and spirit of all personnel was high as a feeling of readiness grew increasingly strong.

In February, 1945, a new T/O was received by the battalion, authorizing two parachute companies and one glider company with three platoons. On 1 March, 1945, the 596 Airborne Engineer Company, of the 517 Combat Team, was incorporated into the battalion, and redesignated Co B, 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion. This company was commanded by 1st Lt. Raymond Hild. The two glider companies, Co A and Co B, were amalgamated and became Co A, 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion.

The next two weeks were busy with reorganization and re-equipping, and in the middle of March, the first alert was given to the battalion. The mission was "CHOKER II" across the Rhine at Worms, in support of the 45th and 3rd Divisions, and a planning and staging period occupied the latter two weeks of March. However, on the 25th of March, 1945, as the companies were loading for departure to the marshalling areas, a cancellation of our mission was received. General Patton's 3rd Army had crossed the Rhine, and overrun our target area.

Early in April, the entire division was alerted and moved to marshalling airfields surrounding Paris and in north France. Operation "EFFECTIVE," at Grosselfinger, Germany, in the Swabian uplands, was given to the division, and the middle of April was our D Day. Again, this time just a few hours before the take off, a cancellation was received. The French 1st Army had broken out of the Black Forest and occupied our area. A third mission in Czechoslovakia for a unit of the division was planned, but not executed.

On V-E Day, the battalion had regrouped in a marshalling area outside of Orleans, France, and shortly afterwards the unit returned to Auxerre and was billeted in Camp Brown, near Auxerre. At Camp Brown, the battalion was occupied with the transfer of high-point officers and men to the 17th Airborne Division and an extensive athletic program until the middle of July. During this period, one company from the 139th Airborne Engineer Battalion was trained and equipped for POM by our battalion.

Barry on the 13th of August, 1945, with division headquarters and the entire division artillery.

Two days out at sea, the ship's radio crackled with the most heart-stirring news the world had heard in many years. The long awaited V-J Day had arrived. Each man reacted to the news in his own way. Strongly attended religious services were held. There was an undercurrent of feeling approaching disbelief. The war had gone on for so many years that it was hard to believe it could be

In June, 1945, Major Wallace was transferred to the 17th Airborne Division, and Lt. Col. Stanley Johnson, of the 139th Airborne Engineer Battalion, 17th Airborne Division, assumed command of the battalion. Accompanying Lt. Col. Johnson from the 139th Airborne Engineer Battalion were Major George Kross as executive officer, Captain Cornell Pope as S-2, and Captain John Lee as S-4.

In July an alert to return to the United States was received by the battalion. Movement to Camp Pittsburgh, near Rheims, France, for processing was the first step toward the United States. On the 8th of August, 1945, the battalion left Camp Pittsburgh for Camp Philip Morris, near Le Havre, and embarked on the U.S.A.T. Thomas ended. The question of redeployment for the occupation of Japan was in the back of everyone's mind, but generally, thoughts were concentrated on the joys of homecoming and the promised thirty days at home.

On 20 August 1945, the U.S.A.T. Thomas Barry docked at New York, and the battalion was taken directly by ferry and train to Camp Kilmer, N. J. From Camp Kilmer, the troops were sent on thirty days' recuperation TDY to their homes through various reception centers. During the fifteen-day extension granted all personnel, our redeployment to the Pacific was cancelled, and the assembly station was designated as Fort Bragg, N. C. During the month of October, the remainder of the battalion personnel, excepting those awaiting discharge at reception stations, assembled at Fort Bragg, N. C.

ON Activation Day, 13 August 1943, Headquarters and Service Company commanded by 2nd Lt. (Now Captain) John E. Darlington, was deep in the responsibilities of supply and service. Some of the non-commissioned officers working to bring their sections to efficient levels at that time were 1st Sgt. Buford Newton, Master Sergeant Joseph Strobel, Tech Sgt. William Pritchard, Tech Sgt. Robert Dodson, Tech Sgt. William Beckum, and S/Sgt. Hubert Parker. S/Sgt. Robert Fike was transferred to the company to take the post of Battalion Operations Sergeant, which he held until his discharge from the Army. During the day the duties of supply, administration, and motor maintenance kept all personnel moving at a fast pace. The day was not over at 1700, however, for at night, basic training was held for newly arrived men to round out a very full day. In January, 1944, Tec 5 Thomas A. Ryan, one of the original cadremen, was appointed warrant officer and took over the post of battalion personnel officer. Tech 4 Melvin Waters of the 713 Ordnance Company was also appointed warrant officer at this time and assumed the post of battalion motor officer. Second Lt. (now 1st Lt.) Homer T. Montgomery took over the position of S-1, and this appointment completed the Battalion Staff.

In January, 1944, the company moved to Camp MacKall, N. C., and set up new headquarters first in the north area and finally in the south area of that camp.

In March part of a cadre for the 659th Airborne Engineer Battalion was furnished by Headquarters & Service Company, taking Sgts. Newton, Kovac, and Beckum. Second Lt. (now 1st Lt.) James Rinehart assumed command of the company in April, and in May replacements from deactivated antiaircraft units were received by H&S

Company. First Sgt. Casteel and T/Sgt. Goodrow, Bn. Supply Sgt., and S/Sgt. John Kielb arrived during this period.

Training and staff duties occupied the company during the summer months of 1944, and preparation for maneuvers in September were being made. The afternoon of Maneuver D Day, Headquarters and Service Company was airlanded by C-47's at Camp Mackall Airport. The company immediately set up their command post and supply dumps, and throughout the maneuvers continued to supply the division with water and all types of engineer supplies.

The communications section under Tech Sgt. Robert Dodson set up radio contact linking all companies of the battalion and battalion headquarters with G-3. Tec 4 (now 1st Sgt.) Meek, Tec 4 Skavarek, Tec 5 Kolligian and Cpl. Stanford comprised the personnel of the section. The Battalion S-4 section commanded by Tech Sgt. Goodrow and S/Sgt. Anderson, had the task of furnishing engineer supplies to the entire division. Company supply was handled by S/Sgt. Kielb and Tec 5 Passaro. The problem of supplying fresh water for the division, another S-4 function was ably handled by Tec 4 Hoogendoorn and Tec 5 Ginsburg. The Battalion Staff at this period included Captain Johnson, from Company C, as S-3, and Lt. Bird as S-2.

In October, 1944, Captain E. K. Kreml assumed command of Headquarters & Service Company.

Preparations for overseas movement were intensified during the months of December and January, and Captain Philip Johnson was appointed executive officer, and Captain R. J. Sollenberger moved back to S-3 from commanding Company "B."

The company moved with the battalion through the staging area to its overseas port of debarkation. Upon arriving in Auxerre, France, the company was billeted in a chateau about 8 kilometers from Auxerre for two weeks and then moved to Camp Brown, just outside of Auxerre.

In March, the company was busy preparing the plans for mission "CHOKER II" until the 24th when the mission was cancelled. The first of April, the company moved to a marshalling area near Orleans, and thence in a few days to a field farther north near St. Andre. Approximately two weeks were spent there formulating plans for operation "EFFECTIVE" before the mission was cancelled, and the company returned to Orleans to join the rest of the battalion. Prior to the move to Orleans, Captain Francis Norton assumed command of Headquarters and Service Company from Captain Edward Kreml, and Captain Kreml was assigned as S-2.

From Orleans, the company moved to Camp Brown, Auxerre, in the middle of May, and in June, 1st Lt. Stolberg and 1st Sgt. Walenga, from the 17th Airborne Division took over the duties of company commander and 1st Sgt.; Captain Norton was transferred to the 17th Airborne Division, and 1st Sgt. Chadwell to Company C, 139th Airborne Engineer Battalion. T/Sgt. Fike, S/Sgt. Fransen, T/3 Peltola and Sgt. Gabriel were also lost to the 17th Airborne Division.

From Auxerre, the trip to the United States was made with the battalion, and in October the Company reformed at Fort Bragg with 1st Lt. George Inlow as Company Commander.

The Company A cadremen who arrived from Camp Butner, on the 15 July 1943 included 1st Sgt. James Chadwell, Mess Sgt. William Krape, S/Sgt. Donald Ruthford, Company Supply Sgt., Cpl. Lester Spencer, Company Clerk, and S/Sgts. Lee R. Kneblick and Robert Fike. The company was commanded by 1st Lt. Arden N. Ballard. A few weeks after the company was formed on 13 August 1943, Company A was activated as part of the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion. The month of October 1943 will be remembered by such men as Paul Geisler, Normand Beaulieu, Carroll Dorothy, John Valente, and Louis Garbin; for they were among the first arrivals after the original cadremen.

Throughout the fall and early winter of 1943, new men arrived from various sources, enabling the company to rapidly progress in its training. Captain Ragen Newberry was assigned to the battalion in the winter of 1943 and replaced Lt. Ballard as A Company Commander. During this phase of training, emphasis was placed on demolitions, bridge building and infantry tactics. The Army Specialist Training Program released a great many men at this time and Ralph Zepp, Robert Herbst, Sherwin Schaffer, Robert Oberlin, Marvin Salisbury, were among those who added to the size and calibre of the company.

Captain David Herbertson took command of Company A when Captain Newberry was transferred from the battalion. Glider training for the entire company was initiated in the spring of 1944. The real test came at the end of the course when equipment was loaded, lashed and flown by the crew, giving eloquent testimony to the ability of the loading team. The lives of the loading team depended upon each man doing his job correctly.

In May, 1944, a change in company organization was authorized to the extent of one parachute platoon per glider company. During this month Lt. Keadle, platoon commander and S/Sgt. Kneblick, platoon sergeant took a group of 25 men to Fort Benning, Ga. Three weeks later the platoon returned to Camp Mackall with all personnel qualified parachutists.

During May, 1944, antiaircraft units deactivated at Camp Edwards provided the company with twenty-five replacements, including James McComman, Harold Heafner, Grady Faulnor, Ivory Felts and Granville Phillips.

Bridge construction training was emphasized during the month of June as the company reviewed the building of many types of combat engineer bridges, including the famous, adaptable Bailey Bridge. Lt. Joseph Willard, who had just returned from combat in Africa, Sicily, and Italy, where he had won the Silver Star, became company commander when Captain Herbertson was designated assistant division engineer. Training during August and early September was directed toward the division's air and ground maneuver.

During the latter part of September the company proceeded to the airport at Lumberton to marshal for its first full scale air maneuvers. The company was transported by C-47's from Lumberton to its objective, Camp Mackall Airport. The initial mission of the company was to establish part of the barrier system surrounding the airport, and many of its outposts were hit repeatedly by the Red mechanized forces. During the week of the ground phase of the maneuvers, the company bridged Downing Creek for division traffic and constructed several miles of corduroy road through thick swamp. During the last day of the maneuver, Company "A" was held in reserve with the battalion to aid in an Infantry attack. Maneuvers ended with a feeling in all ranks that the company had proved its ability to handle any engineer job that might be assigned to it.

Lt. Keadle took over the command of the company on 11 November 1944, and the company was prepared to move overseas. A postponement of the shipping date, however, permitted the resumption of refresher training.

Company "A" moved with the battalion to Camp Shanks on 19 January 1945, and moved out on 24 January 1945 ahead of the battalion as part of a detachment to ready the ship for the embarkation of troops. The company boarded the "Marine Panther" that morning, but in the afternoon moved over to the U.S.A.T. "George Washington" on a change of orders.

Proceeding overseas and to Auxerre, France, with the battalion, the company was billeted in the Chateau Montfort, a beautiful stone mansion, about 13 kilometers from Auxerre. Duties were routine for the first few weeks concerning housekeeping and physical conditioning.

At this time another change in T/O was received, authorizing 3 platoons in one glider company, and Company "A" received all the glidermen from Company "B". Captain Keadle remained as company commander, and platoon officers were Lt. Rinehart, Lt. Grass, and Lt. Fisher, who was transferred from 596th Airborne Engineer Company. Immediately following the consolidation in the glider companies, the 1st and 3rd platoons were sent to Epernay to attend the XVIII Corps Bailey Bridge School.

In the middle of March, Company "A" began preparation for its first mission with the battalion. The mission was "CHOKER II", across the Rhine, and the initial assignment of Company "A" was to make a landing in gliders and immediately move to the east side of the river to prepare that bank and approaches for subsequent crossings. This mission was cancelled, however, on the 25th of March.

Shortly after, on 8 April 1945, Co. "A" moved to a marshalling area near Orleans, France. A new mission, "EFFECTIVE," was planned. Co. "A's" role in this operation was to clear an airport near Grosselfinger, Germany, for continued airlandings by C-47's. The remainder of time in Orleans until V-E Day was spent in demolition problems on the bombed out buildings on the airport, and an extensive athletic program was initiated for the afternoons.

Company "A" moved back to Camp Brown with the battalion and from May until the middle of July was

Two platoons of Company "A" also repaired and cleaned a resort hotel, Hotel Beau Rivage, near Montsauche, France, for a division rest center. Although the division moved out on redeployment before this hotel could be placed in full operation, many men in the bat-

In July, the company proceeded with the battalion first to Camp Pittsburgh, then to Camp Philip Morris and on to Le Havre, embarkation port for home. Pier 16, Staten Island, New York City, was the first landing spot in the United States, and after spending a day at Camp Kilmer, N. J., the personnel of the company was sent to the various reception stations for recuperation leave. Assembly in Fort Bragg, N. C., followed in October, 1945, and the company is now building once again to its former efficient organization.

B COMPANY, 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion, was activated 13 August 1943, at Fort Bragg, N. C. The first company commander was Lt. Daniel Webster. The cadre for the first group of trainees was taken from the 78th Division, and consisted of 1st Sgt. Johnnie Cornelius, S/Sgts. Jay Morris, Theodore Nowak, and Charles Tucker, Sgts. Paul Carter, Lenon Kidd, Cpl. Chiodi. Kitchen personnel were S/Sgt. Jesse Hicks, T/4 Rufus Carpenter, and T/5 Gordon Scott.

The company was slow to fill up, and it wasn't until the last of October that basic training was started. On the first of December men began arriving from ASTP units, and included among the newly arrived men were Haller, Lucey, Rile and Chriss. These men were a welcome addition to the thin ranks of the company. On December 7th, Lt. Webster was shipped overseas, and Lt. (now Captain) John S. Keadle took over the company. Platoon leaders at that time were Lt. Zimmerman and Lt. William Henry.

On January 14, 1944, the company moved to Camp Mackall, N. C., the Airborne Center, and unit training was begun. At this time Lt. Christoph and Lt. Zima joined the company, and Captain Sollenberger replaced Lt. Keadle. In March the company had glider training and its first air sickness, with Gunter bearing the brunt of lost meals and Pitino running a close second. During the last week in March, a new group of men from ASTP joined the company, and names such as Holloway, Berman, Zeigler, Feinburg, Damm, Nosky, and Kemman took their place on the rolls of the company. The last of April, 21 enlisted men and one officer, Lt. Inlow, volunteered for jump school. "A" stage was taken at Camp Mackall and all men qualified on May 27, 1944, at Fort Benning, Ga. During the time of the parachute training for the first group in Fort Benning, the size of the company was again increased with the entry of men from the deactivated antiaircraft units at Camp Edwards, Mass. Hammer, Quinn, Jackson, Mosely, and Chacon are familiar names to this group of men.

Training during these summer months was intensive and included several problems of a week's duration in the field. The company, in all exercises, showed itself to be well trained and capable of handling any engineer task that might be assigned to it. Specialists were trained for their particular slot in the organization, and assault teams to attack and reduce enemy fortifications were formed and trained.

Maneuvers started on September 22, 1944, and lasted until October 8th. The company, including the parachute platoon, went in by glider. The company, functioning as it would in combat, laid mine fields, built bridges, constructed corduroy roads, and even supported in the attack when necessary. The initial mission of company "B" of the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion was to land in gliders and proceed south in advance of the division artillery and bridge Drowning Creek if the existing bridge was blown by the Red forces. Finding the bridge intact, the company was placed under division control, and given the mission of establishing part of the barrier system surrounding the objective. These outposts were held for three days against repeated Red attacks, and when an advance was launched against a Red concentration, Company "B" was attached to the 88th Glider Infantry Regt.

The next task of the company was to bridge Horse Creek for the entire combat team, and this was completed by midnight. The following morning Company "B" was attached to the 2nd Battalion of the 88th Glider Infantry in a coordinated attack on the enemy concentration. This attack ended the air phase of the maneuvers.

During the three days in a rear area for regrouping, Company "B" reverted to battalion control. The primary mission of Company "B" during this ground period was reconnaissance for stream and swamp crossings. Until the end of the maneuver, Company "B" stayed under battalion control. Capt. Francis Norton assumed command of the company after maneuvers and retained it until the old Company "B" was dissolved.

After maneuvers the company began preparation for moving overseas. Movement was scheduled for the last of November, but a two months' postponement came and it began to move in January. The company left Camp Mackall on January 19, and moved to Camp Shanks, New York.

On January 26, 1945, the company sailed from New York Harbor on board the U. S. A. T. George Washington. Seasickness was not too prevalent, however, Kemman looked at the boat and got sick, and Kelly stepped on board and duplicated. Both recovered after leaving the boat. The crossing took 10 days and the company landed at Le Havre, France, on February 6. Camp Lucky Strike was a muddy, unpleasant interlude of two weeks until the company moved to a chateau near Auxerre, France, via a four-day 40 & 8 trip.

It was at this chateau in March, 1945, that the old "B" Company was dissolved and the 596th Parachute Company took its place. Men of the new "B" Company had behind it, as the 596th Parachute Company, a very good, and quite a long combat record. It spent a short time in Italy, and then jumped on Southern France in that historic airborne invasion as part of the 517th Combat Team. It also fought in the bulge and in Germany. The commander of the company at the time was Lt. Raymond Hild. He was replaced in March by Capt. Bernard S. Freiberg.

The first of April found the company at a marshalling area near Lille and later in another near Amien where missions were alternately planned and cancelled until a few days before the end of hostilities. In both operations, "CHOKER II" and "EFFECTIVE," Company "B" was attached to the 517th Combat Team initially, and their mission in both cases was to establish and defend road blocks on the regimental perimeter. The end of the war in Europe found the company at an airfield near Orleans, and shortly it moved to Auxerre.

The company stayed at Auxerre until it began its re-deployment to the United States, on the 26th of July. After short stops at Camp Pittsburgh and Camp Philip Morris, the company left Le Havre August 12th. It arrived in New York Harbor the 20th of August, and the next day the men left on recuperation furloughs.

The company reassembled at Fort Bragg, N. C., but many of the veterans of the company with sufficient points to qualify them for discharge have returned to the cities and villages which are their homes.

COMPANY "C", the oldest parachute company in the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion, was formed long before the 13th Airborne Division was activated. The company was activated on the fifteenth of March, 1943, at Fort Bragg, N. C., under the command of Captain Fred Rosell. The company at that time consisted of eight officers and 131 enlisted men. Soon after activation, the company was ordered to Camp Mackall, forty miles from Fort Bragg and arrived at the new camp on the sixth of April, 1943. For a short period the company was on a replacement pool basis, receiving and sending out parachute engineer soldiers. In the middle of May, the company assisted on the Kershaw maneuvers. Company "C" was not engaged tactically on these maneuvers but confined its activities to setting off explosives to simulate enemy dive bombing and also acted as road guards. At the end of May, the company returned to Camp Mackall and was given the task of constructing a parachute landing field. Some member of the company with the mind of a statistician counted 800 tree stumps cleared from the field with a total of 3000 pounds of explosives used in the task.

Fifteenth July, 1943, saw the company once again stationed at Fort Bragg. Company "C" joined the cadre companies and thus the 129th Airborne Engineer Battalion was formed. On the 13th of August, 1943, the battalion was activated with the rest of the 13th Airborne Division. At this time the company was under the command of 1st Lt. Philip Johnson, who was later promoted to Major as Battalion Executive Officer. One of the finest records ever compiled on range firing was achieved by Company "C" at Fort Bragg. Over 75 percent of the company qualified as expert riflemen. The Division Commander, in a letter of commendation, stated, in part, that he "was proud to have Company 'C' in the Division." The company officers at this time, in addition to 1st Lt. Philip Johnson, commander, were 1st Lt. John V. Physioc (later company commander), 1st Lt. James Pegram, 1st Lt. William Hannan, and 2nd Lts. Church, Vin Bampus, Cappelz and Macinko. Then, as now, James J. Boyle was 1st Sgt., and the platoon sergeants were James A. Baston, Thomas Fretina and Leo J. Arsenault. The first two weeks of January, 1944, found the company employed as part of the Red Forces in maneuvers. The enemy of the Red Force was the 17th Airborne Division. In the middle of January the whole division moved to Camp Mackall where training was resumed. One of Company "C's" jobs upon returning to Camp Mackall was the construction of a bazooka range. In March, 1st Lt. Physioc, 2nd Lt. Darch and two platoon sergeants, Thomas Fretina and James Baston, were sent to Camp Pickett, Va., as part of a cadre for the 659th Airborne Engineer Battalion. In August of the same year Capt. Physioc returned to take command of Company "C" when Capt. Johnson was transferred to the battalion staff.

Ground and air maneuvers for the division were scheduled for the latter part of September and the beginning of October, and intensive refresher training was instituted just prior to maneuvers. The night of maneuver "D" day the company landed by parachute in "F" field near Camp Mackall Airport. After assembling, the company moved out on its mission, which was to set up road blocks and prepare bridges for demolition. Opposition was light during the air phase of the maneuvers but many sleepless nights were spent before maneuvers came to a close the second week in October.

The division had been alerted for shipment overseas in November, but as a postponement for two months was announced, training was resumed until the middle of January. On the 19th of January, 1945, the battalion left for Camp Shanks, N. Y., where the division was being processed for shipment to Europe. At 11 o'clock, the night of January 25th, the battalion boarded the U.S.A.T. George Washington and the next morning left the port for the European Theater of Operations.

The 7th of February found the battalion walking through the rubble-strewn streets of Le Havre, France, to waiting trucks which took the outfit to Camp Lucky Strike on the French Channel coast. After a two-week nightmare of mud, cold and inadequate food, the battalion left by rail for the town of Auxerre, about 200 miles southeast. The vehicles of travel were the fabled 40 & 8's. After a few days in the garrison Caserne at Auxerre, the company was moved to a chateau about six miles from town.

In March the mission "CHOKER II" over the Rhineland was scheduled, but a last hour cancellation came through with the company already in trucks ready to move to the marshalling area. On the 4th of April, Company "C" went by truck convoy to the marshalling area at Abbeville, France. Their mission, "EFFECTIVE," was planned and cancelled during the forty-five days the company spent in the area. Company "C's" mission, in both operation, "CHOKER II" and "EFFECTIVE," was to prepare and defend barriers on the outskirts of the 515th Regimental sector.

The company moved to Orleans, France, to regroup with the rest of the battalion and on May 16th moved back to Auxerre. Unexpectedly, in July orders were received to move the battalion back to the United States.

Camp Pittsburgh and Camp Philip Morris were stepping stones to Le Havre. On August 12th the battalion once more passed through Le Havre, which looked precisely as it had seven months previously. The Army Transport Thomas H. Barry took the battalion back to the U.S.A., and after a rough crossing landed at Staten Island, New York, eight days later. From Camp Kilmer everybody was sent to the Reception Station nearest his home for thirty days' recuperation furlough. Subsequently this furlough was lengthened to forty-five days, and the company reformed at Fort Bragg, N. C., almost two years after the battalion first made its headquarters at that station. Many of the former members of the company have been discharged from the Army and other veteran members have either re-enlisted or are awaiting separation from the service.

TO THE MEN OF THE 326TH:

The cessation of hostilities and our safe return home have given me this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks for your loyalty and faithful years of service.

Many of you were with me in the 88th, and have carried into this regiment all of its fine standards and traditions.

Some of you have already been discharged, and others of you will be released within the next few months. To these men I would like to say that it has been an honor to have served with you.

I know that you are going back into civilian life as better citizens and finer human beings. Your past army training should provide an ideal background for the early realization of your ambitions. If your undertakings in your new life are faced with the same spirit you have shown in this Regiment, I am certain that you will be successful.

In closing, let me wish you the greatest of happiness and the best of luck.

Sincerely,

SAMUEL ROTH,

HISTORY OF THE 326th GLIDER INFANTRY REGT.

INTRODUCTION

THE History of the 326th Glider Infantry is the story of two regiments. In March, 1945, the 88th Glider Infantry, the first American glider unit, and the 326th, one of the first glider airborne regiments, merged to form the present 326th Glider Infantry Regiment. From their inception these regiments devised, created, corrected, tested, and proved the practicability of every method and tactic used by glidermen in this war. Therefore, the history of the 326th mirrors the growth of all glider regiments in the United States Army.

WORLD WAR I

The 326th Infantry was first organized at Camp Gordon, Georgia, on August 29, 1917, under the command of Colonel John C. McArthur. It was one of the four infantry regiments of the 82nd "All-American Division." After spending seven months of intensive training at Camp Gordon, the Regiment embarked from New York April 29, 1918, and arrived at Le Havre, France, on May 17.

FIRST CASUALTY

Immediately following the arrival of the organization, small detachments were sent into the line to accustom the men to trench warfare.

On June 9, 1918, Captain Jewett Williams of the 326th was killed—the Division's first casualty.

The first combat mission assigned to the Regiment was to relieve the 101st Infantry of the 26th Division in the Toul sector. On August 4, a part of the Regiment was sent over the top for the first time to secure certain information about the enemy. Advancing behind an artillery barrage, these units of the 326th captured three German machine guns, inflicted 75 casualties, and secured the information desired. This was the first offensive action in which any unit of the 82nd Division participated, and the machine guns were the first enemy materiel captured by the All-American Division. Shortly after this action the Regiment was relieved and moved to form part of the Marbach defense sector.

ST. MIHIEL - MEUSE - ARGONNE

At dawn, September 12, 1918, the St. Mihiel offensive, the first major operation of the AEF, was launched. The 82nd Division acted as the right pivot on which it was decided to turn the line. Thus, the mission of the 326th Infantry was to hold to its position without advancing. And hold it they did, despite the intensity of a prolonged artillery barrage, a harassing gas attack and persistent strafing by German aircraft.

With the success of this operation, the 326th moved to participate in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. The Regiment fought honorably through this campaign, achieving considerable distinction when it crossed the Aire River at Marcq under heavy machine gun and artillery fire. The action helped greatly to pave the way for this outstanding American Victory in World War I.

As a result of the flanking operations in this advance, the 82nd Division, including the 326th Infantry, played a most important role in clearing the Boche from his long established positions in the Argonne Forest. Advancing into the "impregnable" Krimhilde-Stellung Line, the Division was largely responsible for forcing the enemy to withdraw to the north, the beginning of the route which ended in a few days with the complete German capitulation.

IN ACTIVE OPERATIONS LONGEST

As a result of its campaigning in France, the 326th Infantry is entitled to battle participation credit for: St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, and Lorraine. Engaged from August 9, 1918, to October 31, 1918—a period of eighty-four days—the Regiment, as an integral part of the 82nd Division, shared the distinction of having served in active operations longer, continuously, and without relief, than any other regiment in the AEF.

The 326th remained in France, in the Prauthoy area, after the Armistice was signed. It returned to the United States in April 1919, and was demobilized at Camp Mills, New York.

A regimental shield was designed depicting the Regiment's notable achievements during World War I. The shield is blue for Infantry, with a wavy white band running through the center, representing the Aire River crossing. A blue square edged with gold divides this white band into, symbolizing the bridge that the Regiment built over the river. Two fleurs-de-lis in the lower half of the shield refer to the two major operations of the Regiment. In the top center of the shield, a boar's head, the crest of General James Oglethorpe, founder of Georgia, indicates the allocation of the 326th to his State when the Regiment was later placed in the Organized Reserve. The Latin phrase, "ASPERA JUVANT," is inscribed across the bottom. Literally translated, it means: "Difficulties Delight," a more academic way of saying, "The tougher it gets, the better we like it."

REACTIVATED

After the war the 326th Infantry was reconstituted as an Organized Reserve Unit and allotted to the Fourth Corps Area. It remained in this status for the duration of the peace.

When the sneak attack on Pearl Harbor plunged the United States into war again, one of the first of the Organized Reserve "paper divisions" to be activated was the 82nd Division, under the command of Major General Omar Bradley, with Brigadier General Ridgway, later commander of the 18th Airborne Corps, as Assistant Division Commander. The 82nd became a streamlined, triangular division—still known, however, as the "All-American"—and the 326th was one of its three infantry regiments.

The 326th Infantry itself was reactivated at Camp Claiborne, Louisiana, on March 25, 1942, with Colonel Stuart Cutler as Commanding Officer. Three thousand recruits, hailing mainly from the States of the Ohio River and some Southern States, formed the mass of the Regiment. The enlisted cadre came from the 47th Infantry of the 9th Division; the officers were assembled from various divisions and replacement training centers.

It was Colonel Cutler's idea that the outfit should be known as the "Fighting 326th—the Singing Regiment." Each man was issued a song sheet—one hymn and two marching songs included. As we passed regimental headquarters, lame and worn from a long march, the order would be given, "Sing!", and the whole Regiment would begin its serenade, "Onward Christian Soldiers" ... The Colonel got a kick out of that.

Months of intensive field work under a hot, broiling sun in the heart of Louisiana swamp lands fused diverse elements into a well-trained, well-disciplined fighting unit. The rigors of the country, living conditions, and the training seemed designed to make the men prepared for anything. By the end of the summer, the 326th was ready, willing, even eager for combat.

BECAME AIRBORNE

On August 15, 1942, General Ridgway announced to the men that the 82nd Division was being accorded the signal honor of becoming the first Airborne Division in the American Army. A new period of training was necessary to familiarize the men with the fundamentals of Airborne tactics and air transport. In October, the All-American Division moved to Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

Compared to Louisiana, Fort Bragg was heaven. The two-story barracks were heated, latrines and showers were both modern and convenient. The program of tactical training in the field continued, but the fundamentals of Airborne training, such as the loading and lashing of equipment in aircraft, became a new training feature. A large group of replacements joined the Regiment at this time, and the predominantly Midwestern twang was mixed with the accents of New York.

LEAVE EIGHTY-SECOND

Early in 1943 it was decided to change the composition of the 82nd from two glider and one parachute regiments to two jump and one glider regiments. The question of which glider outfit, the 325th or the 326th, would remain with the Division was decided, it is told, by a flip of a coin. The 325th Glider Infantry won, and on February 10, 1943, the 326th was transferred from the All-American Division to the Airborne Command. The next month the Regiment left Bragg for Alliance, Nebraska.

ALLIANCE

On March 4, 1943, the 326th Glider Infantry arrived at the Alliance Army Airbase. Three feet of snow and thirty below zero temperature was the Nebraskan Spring that greeted the Regiment . . . Spring indeed!

But warm weather soon became an actuality, and so did training. At this time, in June, 1943, Colonel William O. Poindexter took over the reins of the 326th and retained command of the Regiment until after V-E Day.

The phrase to describe the period of the 326th in the sandhills of Nebraska is "getting tough." Conditioning the men for all the possible exigencies of modern battle was the keynote. Physical and mental hardening was the ultimate goal of every schedule that was typed and every training feature that was prepared. The German village built by the Regiment at the site of an abandoned ranch, and dubbed "Fuehrerville," was glamorized in the newspapers of the region. The fame of the 326th close combat course and its reputation for sheer physical vigor spread throughout the Army and was recorded in the pages of "Yank" as the "toughest in the country." Schools in demolitions, camouflage, attack of fortified positions, and the detection and the removal of mines were held. Platoons were sent into the field on their own for problems of a week's duration.

In addition to being put through the contortions of an army training schedule, the troops also battled nature. Sandstorms were so bad that they were issued dust respirators, and the mosquitoes were big enough to saddle.

But weekends were another story. The men found the people of the region warm and friendly. The surrounding area became a "soldier's paradise"—pretty girls, laughs and good whiskey.

ELUSIVE 88th

Nor was the air training of a glider infantry regiment neglected. That September, the First Airborne Brigade Maneuvers were held. The entire 326th was flown in tactical loads, both in C-47 planes and in CG-4A gliders, to Fort Robinson, Nebraska, to engage the 88th. For five days the Regiment lived in the field as an Airborne Unit, unsuccessfully chasing an elusive 88th through the Black Hills.

JOIN THIRTEENTH

Returning to Alliance, the 326th continued with its field work until the first week in December, when it left the First Airborne Brigade to join the 13th Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

The Regiment arrived at Fort Bragg in the late afternoon of December 3, and moved into the cadre-manned 189th Glider Infantry area. As soon as things leveled into normal routine, training began again.

We of the 189th didn't like it when the 326th moved into our area. We were supposed to get shiny rookies to train, and here were these guys, practically vets. But they shot a rugged game of craps and owned a pool table, so after a while we took them in . . . and even adopted their name!

Christmas, 1943, was bitter cold. A minor flu epidemic put many men in the hospital for the holidays, so the Regiment hoisted cubicles around the beds and swallowed pills twice a day.

On January 14, 1944, the 326th struck out for Camp Mackall on a forced march of 40 miles . . . arriving 30 hours later. When the men arrived, tired and drenched from rain and sweat, the 88th was already there. On January 2, the 88th had started its movement to Mackall by the slow process of a fluid maneuver with the 17th Airborne Division.

88TH HISTORY

The 88th had been activated at Fort Benning, Georgia, on 10 October, 1941, as the 88th Infantry Airborne Battalion with a strength of 27 officers and 500 enlisted men, Lt. Col. Elbridge G. Chapman commanding. During the early days, training consisted chiefly of advanced basic training, but the great innovation was instruction in the use of parachutes, including a brief course at The Parachute School, and orientation flights in C-47's.

During the first week of November, 1941, one composite company participated in an Airborne problem which took them to MacDill Field, Florida. This was the first problem of its kind in which the 88th took part.

EXPERIMENTAL WORK

In January, 1942, the Battalion moved from its tent area at Fort Benning to a location on the bluffs adjacent to Lawson Field. A number of plane mock-ups constructed here were used to introduce methods of loading men and equipment for Airborne missions. This primary period was used chiefly for the testing of loading and tying down of equipment in planes and mock-ups. All work done in this connection was new and experimental. The findings influenced the layout plans of troop transports and gliders then being designed.

MARCH OF TIME

The importance and the allure of the outfit as glider pioneers was now widely recognized. The March of Time sent down a crew of cameramen to catch the 88th going through its various Airborne activities, and these pictures were incorporated into a film entitled "Our New Army." In April, 1942, the 88th accomplished its first reorganization, expanding to a full battalion of 1000 men.

Movement orders were received for a permanent change of station, and during the first week of May, the Battalion moved from Fort Benning, Georgia, to Fort Bragg, North Carolina.

FIRST GLIDER APPEARS

At this time an incident of lasting importance occurred, an event that should not be overlooked in recounting Airborne history. The officers of the 88th received advance word that a glider, one of the first off the assembly-line, was flying to Bragg from the Dayton, Ohio, factory. It was officially known as the X-CG4, a yellow-winged, blue-bodied plane without a motor. The 88th Airborne was ready to sprout wings.

The first month at Fort Bragg was spent in familiarization with terrain, orientation, and a continuation of Airborne training. Mock-ups were constructed in the nearby battalion training area.

In June of 1942 the Battalion was reorganized and expanded to a regiment less two battalions. At this time an Airborne Training Instructional Team was created for the purpose of teaching divisions Airborne tactics and technique. The summer of 1942 was spent in preparing this team for its task.

TRAIN 2ND INFANTRY DIVISION

September brought the first assignment, the training of the 2nd Infantry Division at Fort Sam Houston, Texas. In commending the work of the 88th with its first guinea pig, Major General William Roberson wrote the following letter: "As Commander of the 2nd Infantry Division, I desire to express my grateful appreciation for the superior manner in which the 88th Glider Infantry, under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Robert C. Aloe, conducted the technical training of the 2nd Infantry Division during its Airborne training, from September 25, to November 1, 1942." The mission was accomplished.

BECOMES 88TH GLIDER INFANTRY

The remainder of the Regiment stayed behind at Fort Bragg, and in that same month, again reorganized as the 88th Glider Infantry. Under the new table of organization, the unit was now comprised of some 1600 enlisted men and 73 officers.

In the beginning of November 1942, the Airborne Training Instructional Team returned from Texas to Fort Bragg. The Regiment then proceeded to the Army Air Base at Maxton, North Carolina, for its first practical training in gliders.

The movement to Maxton was a march of 55 miles.

Colonel Aloe gave the order to move out. We covered 22 miles the first day. Our route took us down Chicken Road, past Mott Lake, and we bivouacked opposite Sandy Grove cemetery. By this time the name Chicken Road had taken on special significance to the men, and the implication of Sandy Grove Cemetery was obvious. The "hike" was completed in three days, but 50 percent of the men had fallen by the wayside.

In December Colonel Aloe was succeeded as commanding officer by Colonel Joseph Hinton. The period from December, 1942, to February, 1943, was spent chiefly in the study of advanced glider technique. The first orientation flights in gliders were given during the latter part of this period.

TRAIN AIRBORNE OFFICERS

During February, 1943, the Regiment was relieved of its assignment of training divisions in Airborne tactics and was transferred from Fort Bragg, North Carolina, to Fort Meade, South Dakota, where intensive ground work was undertaken. Cadre was selected to form the 190th Infantry Airborne Battalion which stayed on at Maxton. These troops did an excellent job in training the officer cadre of the Eleventh, Thirteenth, and Seventeenth Airborne Divisions. They also completed the training of the 82nd and the 101st Airborne Divisions.

In April, the 88th was assigned to the First Airborne Infantry Brigade, joining the 326th Glider Infantry and the 507th Parachute Infantry. April to July was spent enduring the rigors of a variety of field problems, starting at platoon level and building up to regimental exercises. During this time three hundred fifty enlisted men, direct from induction stations, joined the Regiment.

ROBAIX LAKE

At the end of May, the Regiment left for the Robaix Lake Maneuver Area, twenty miles from Fort Meade, to engage in extensive field exercises. The terrain and the problems were rough, and both taxed endurance to the limit. The men dragged fully-loaded handcarts up and down the rugged Black Hills. To climax it all, on the morning of June 4, they arose, stiff and chilled, covered with a four-inch blanket of snow. The barracks looked mighty good after two weeks of mountains, snow handcarts, little sleep, sore muscles and shortened tempers. That weekend, Ma's Nifty Rooms and the Gold Bar in Deadwood did a land-office business.

88TH JOINS THIRTEENTH

In August, the 88th went to Fort Robinson, Nebraska, to defend it in a maneuver against the combined airborne landings of the 326th and 507th. The out-manned and out-gunned 88th played an elusive game of "cat and mouse" for five days. The wily tactics of Colonel Hinton ultimately resulted in both enemy regiments firing on each other on the supposition that they had finally found their long-sought adversary. Returning to Fort Meade, the men were proud, but markedly tired. Deadwood's bars were busy again that weekend.

Rumors of leaving Fort Meade and Deadwood began to circulate. Late in November these stories took on the fiber of fact, and the 88th boarded Pullmans for the long haul back to Fort Bragg, North Carolina. They arrived on the first of December, 1943, and joined the newly activated 13th Airborne Division.

FIRST FATALITY

Early in February, the two glider regiments started from scratch, relearning the basic principles of loading and lashing with CG-4As and C-47s. They flew both day and night; the double-tow night flights were especially risky. It was a distasteful business to the men. On one of these lifts, two gliders crashed in mid-air. One of the pilots cut loose before the other. He banked to swing into landing position, and in the dark, unable to see the other glider, his wing sheared off the other's tail-assembly. The tailless glider spun to earth, the wing lights cutting a weird design in the night. It crashed, a mass of wreckage. Five 326th men were killed instantly, including the Regiment's two Chaplains. After that, double-tow night flights stopped. The gliders had earned their name, "flying coffins."

"POR" TO EUROPE

In the last week of March it was rumored that the 13th would soon be sending replacements to overseas Airborne divisions. In April the whispers became signed orders, and 1200 men from the 88th and 326th were alerted for shipment to Fort Meade, Maryland. Later we received letters and read that most of them had joined the 82nd and 101st in England and had participated in the invasion of "Festung Europa." Also in April, Colonel Samuel Roth, who had returned from the North African Campaign, took over as commanding officer of the 88th.

When General Cutler, former 326th Commander, left the Division, he was given a farewell party by the officers of his Regiment. Everyone knocked down more than a few. Leaving, Colonel Poindexter judiciously pronounced to the bartender, "We don't mind a kick, but the next time you make a punch, pad those damn horseshoes."

In mid-May, men from the Air Corps and ASTP brought the two regiments back to normal strength. But, if personnel strength was up to normal, morale was not. These replacements were bitter and disillusioned; their morale could not be lower. They didn't like infantry basic, but they learned. . . .

AIRBORNE MANEUVERS

In June the Regiment was given 100 days in which to prepare itself for POE. Squad problems changed to platoon operations, and then to company controlled affairs, all intended to culminate in a Divisional maneuver in the fall.

In September the whole Division marched out for a three-day exercise that has since been nicknamed "The Big Swamp Problem."

After an eleven-mile hike with full equipment, we reached Drowning Creek Swamp. It was getting dark by now, and it started to rain, but we had to cross it. That night in the swamp was as dismal a period as any of us had ever experienced. It was slow, churning movement in groping blackness and never-ending marsh. We inched forward in single file . . . five hours of hearing the Lieutenant, who was in the rear of the column, growl, "Close it up, close it up!", made us want to reduce the T.O. by one. The lead man finally stopped at a hole too deep to wade. After several vain orders to get moving, the Lieutenant started forward, edging his way from man to man, to investigate the holdup. He groped, felt the lead man, and continued. No one said a word. . . . After his rescue, we proceeded in silence.

Later that same month, we climaxed the summer's training with an airborne maneuver which was the biggest ever held in the United States.

The problem was to take off from the Laurinburg-Maxton Airbase, travel 40 miles northeast, and capture the Hoffman Airfield.

The maneuver was divided into an air phase and a ground phase . . . The glidermen had prepared in advance for their takeoff, and when the time finally came to leave, there was relief in the faces of those who had been sweating it out. They boarded the gliders with apprehension and buckled themselves into their seats. Then the long nylon lines became taut, and they were on their way. Although Hoffman was only 40 miles away, the route of approach covered 150 miles.

The ride was smooth, and the gliders landed on schedule without a single mishap. As each load hit the already captured Hoffman Airfield, the men piled out and ran to pre-designated assembly areas to form into company formations.

Then the Regiment fanned out beyond the field to consolidate its gains. Two days later the umpires ended the first, or airborne phase of the maneuver, and the Regiment moved into a non-tactical bivouac for a well-earned two-day break.

Our cup ran over. During the break we received a three-month backlog of glider pay, which became effective from July, 1944. It was bank night and everybody was in the chips . . . but not for long. Next day many sent home money orders, others orders for money.

Refreshed and clean, the men started the ground phase with a night march to our forward assembly areas. The rest of the maneuver settled into a series of hikes, and movements from position to position in pursuit of the "enemy." One battalion was cut off, and for the rest of the time was supplied solely by air.

The maneuver was climaxed with a dawn attack that lasted well into the next day. Finally, when it seemed that weary legs could go no farther, the umpires declared the show over.

The exhausted troops rode back to Mackall, badly in need of both rest and showers, but singing, nevertheless.

READYING FOR SHIPMENT

As soon as the maneuver was over, they started getting ready for POE, for they expected to leave within a month. In October the Regiment was alerted for shipment and confined to camp. It turned out to be a false start, for the alert was lifted, and a sixty-day extension given.

Christmas week, 1944, the unit was alerted again. This was the real thing. After three weeks of waiting, the Regiment finally left from Mackall on January 13th, bound for the Port of Embarkation.

When the 326th was ready to leave Mackall for the POE, Colonel Poindexter assembled the Regiment and made a speech that ended with the prophetic words: "I have no political ambition, nor any desire for promotion. All that I want is to carry my Regiment overseas, fulfill our mission, and bring back each and every man without a scratch." As it turned out, the Colonel was not far amiss.

SHANKS-POE

The destination was Camp Shanks, a POE close enough to New York City to provide the men with the pleasant prospect of visiting the Big Town before shoving off.

They arrived. The men left the train and started their climb to the top of a long hill where cold barracks awaited them.

The next morning processing began. Weapons and other ordnance equipment were inspected for the last time . . . clothing checked and replaced . . . blouses turned in . . . lectures on insurance and security were conducted. "Abandon-ship" drill was practiced, with emphasis on the dangers of leaping into the sea. The "tough" physical, so often referred to, was conducted by our Regimental doctors as a formality, disillusioning those who had hoped to be disqualified for alleged disabilities. As a final and painful ending to the physical, additional shots were administered.

UP THE GANGPLANK

Processing completed, the men received overnight passes and visited New York for a last fling. The big moment had arrived—the final alert. They were about to sail.

The remaining days were spent under rigid restrictions while final preparations were made. When these were completed they boarded the train once more, ferried across the river, and stood ready at the pier. The band blared and Red Cross women hurried up and down in the dimness, dispensing hot coffee and doughnuts. After answering to their names, the men received meal tickets and struggled up the gangplank into the depths of the ship. Once in the troop compartments, they piled into their bunks, equipment and all.

Midway up the gangplank a red-haired PFC, loaded down with gear, turned and shouted, "Is this trip necessary?"

The 326th aboard the General George O. Squire, a regular Navy transport, and the 88th aboard the U.S.A.T. George Washington, a converted German luxury liner, picked up a convoy just outside the harbor. In the convoy, tankers, cargo ships, other transports and escort vessels extended as far as the eye could see.

The weather was warm and the seas were fairly calm for an Atlantic winter, but from the first day seasickness took its toll. By the third day, green faces and regurgitating stomachs settled back to normal and ship routine began. The men suffered through inspections, gas-mask drills, calisthenics, and lectures.

The long monotonous hours aboard ship were broken by an entertainment program. Bands mixed swing and classics in frequent deck concerts, skits, and specialty acts were improvised, and occasional movies were shown.

LAND IN FRANCE

During the last days of the voyage, the men searched the horizon for the first sight of land. On February 5th, the Isle of Wight, just off Southampton, England, appeared off the port side. The ships anchored for the night in a heavy fog. Morning found them headed for France. On reaching Le Havre that day, the men caught their first glimpse of war-torn Europe. Debarking at the shattered port, the 326th was packed into 40 and 8s bound for Camp Lucky Strike, the staging area.

LUCKY STRIKE

At Lucky Strike, a huge canvas city greeted their eyes. The seasonal rains had turned the place into a sea of mud; ordinary walking became impossible. Food was a popular topic of conversation, for it was scarce in those first few days before the supply problem was adjusted. Men stood through long lines for even an extra slice of bread.

It was dark and we were feeding. After receiving our food we moved on in search of a place to eat. Suddenly the man in front of me disappeared with a loud splash into one of the many sump holes surrounding the kitchen area. Emerging, covered with slime, but still clutching his precious chow, his only comment was: "Watch that first step, it's a little slippery."

The entire camp area had been extensively mined by the Nazis, as part of the heavy beach defenses for the nearby towns of St. Valery en Caux and Fé camp. During our stay in Lucky Strike the work of digging up these mines was still incomplete. Mine-clearing teams were organized, including personnel of the 326th and the 88th, and detonations were frequently heard in the regimental areas.

REACH SENS

After ten days at Camp Lucky Strike, we left for Sens, a town of eighteen thousand people. It was 70 miles south of Paris, and had figured prominently in the history of France from the earliest settlements of the Romans. Sens is credited with being the first city in France and its capital in early days.

On February 19th, the men detrained from the 40 and 8s, and marched through the streets of the town to the Caserne, where they were to be quartered. The whole population of Sens was out to observe the arrival of "les Américains," and the men sang and whistled as they strutted by.

QUARTERED IN CASERNE

Caserne Gemeau was a walled-in half-mile-square area on the northeast edge of town. It contained many stone buildings that had been built in the 1870s to house units of the French Cavalry. The buildings were filthy and in a state of dis-repair; they had been used by the Nazis for Russian PWs during the occupation. Sens had been liberated by Patton on August 24, 1944, some five months before, but the courtyards of the Caserne were still strewn with abandoned German equipment.

MEET THE FRENCH

The men spent several days cleaning and repairing their quarters. Finally they were issued passes and they invaded the city, armed only with their little French dictionaries. As might be expected, language difficulties arose immediately, but American ingenuity conquered all. Women—and more important than just ordinary women—laundry women, were contacted. Once again the 326th had clean underwear! Before many days had passed, guards were stationed at the house with blue doors. A more intimate acquaintance with French national customs and beverages was also acquired.

During a visit to the city we were aroused by the frenzied gestures of a GI near the market place, describing his first venture. "I met a woman who couldn't speak English, and I couldn't speak French. But she bought me drinks and fed me eats and took me out and put me up for the night. And hell, I was in fatigues. Can you imagine what I could have done in OD's?"

Our purpose in coming overseas was not forgotten. In a short space of time, the inevitable training schedule made its appearance.

AMALGAMATION

Rumors concerning the dissolution of the 88th had been running the grapevine for quite some time. On March 1, 1945, the reorganization became fact.

The amalgamation of the 326th Glider Infantry and the 88th Glider Infantry into a single regiment, was accomplished quickly. One Glider Regiment of three battalions, equal in strength to the combined personnel of the former two Regiments was the result. From February to March, the strength of the 326th jumped from 1668 to 3235 officers and enlisted men.

For several days the entire Caserne area was a flurry of movement. After the first spurt of confusion, things settled back to normal. Colonel Poindexter remained as Commanding Officer with Lt. Col. Donald A. McPherson as the new Executive Officer.

A three weeks training program was started, consisting of squad and company problems, stressing village fighting and the new lessons learned by the American armies edging toward the Rhine barrier. Everyone guessed that a big show was in the offing—that General Eisenhower would soon throw in the Airborne to spearhead an offensive across the Rhine River into Germany. The 326th was getting ready.

The increasing tempo of simple happenings around the Regiment indicated that something was in the wind. Clothing checks, the mood of key officers, the quality of the food, all added up; it was evident that our turn was at hand.

MISSION — CHOKER-TWO

The news spread first through unofficial channels. Finally, after days of anticipation, of believing and disbelieving, the 28th Article of War was read. All doubts were now dissolved. The Regiment was alerted; trench knives were distributed!

Frantic but thorough preparations continued. Medical kits were handed out. Orders were given concerning the equipment to be taken, and that to be left behind. The men busied themselves cleaning their weapons, this time diligently. The trench knives were sharpened to razor-fine edge.

Packs were readied, equipment was loaded, last letters were written. Everything was in order. The complex gears that had turned to produce top-notch fighting units had done their work. The 326th was prepared to meet the enemy.

The mission, officially designated as Choker Two, called for an Airborne landing southwest of Worms, to enable General Patch's Seventh Army to cross the Rhine at that point. On March 30th, Patton's 3rd Army, encountering surprisingly little resistance, crossed the River in force and shot his armored spearheads through Southern Germany. The need for the Airborne operation was nullified and Choker Two was cancelled.

SOME DISAPPOINTED

The battalion commanders notified their men of "Patch's Reprieve" as soon as they received word themselves. The reaction of the men, who had really been sweating it out, was one of relief mixed with disappointment—disappointment that this "sweating it out" had been in vain, that the inevitable "Baptism of Fire" was again postponed.

On March 24, the 17th Airborne had landed on the east bank of the Rhine at Wesel to run interference for the British Second and American Ninth Armies. The drive into the Ruhr industrial area; Patton's crossing of the Upper Rhine nipping off the Saar Basin; the Remagen bridgehead—all indicated that the final phase of the war was at hand. To prevent any disruption of the Allied timetable, the 13th Airborne Division was ordered to move up into a position of readiness.

MOVE TO MARSHALLING AREAS

On April 4, 1945, the 326th Glider Infantry departed from Sens, France, for marshalling areas. These, barbed-wire tent enclosures on the edge of airfields, were the very ones from which the 17th Airborne had left only a few days before. Individual parts of the Regiment were located at various air fields, from Rheims to the district south-southwest of Paris.

All one could do here was wait and sweat it out, then wait some more. Eat, sleep, and just enough athletics to keep from going stale. From this angle the war looked very unreal—living in comparative comfort, with P.W.'s attending to all menial details, yet within any hour the Regiment might be in battle behind Nazi lines.

This was really the place for abundant living. One GI was receiving bi-weekly packages from home full of cocoa powder and marsh mallows. Water was hardly the fluid to consummate the drink, so every night after dusk the culprit would abscond with several tins of evaporated milk from the officer's mess. One day a lieutenant was complaining about the dark coffee he had to put up with and was overheard by the "cocoa drinker." "Pretty rough, Lieutenant," he muttered, "but things are tough all over."

END APPROACHES

From many of these airfields the vital "battle of supplies" was being fought. From dawn to dusk endless streams of C-47 ferried gasoline and other high priority materiel to the forward American spearheads that were thrusting deeper into Germany. On the return trip they brought back wounded, and to those who saw the rows of stretchers and ambulances, their own comfort and momentary security seemed incongruous indeed.

The Air Transports then began flying out the RAMP's, Allied prisoners of war liberated by our forward elements. French, Russians, English, Canadians, Australians, New Zealanders, and Americans, released from P.W. camps and Nazi mistreatment after periods of captivity ranging from three months to five years, started streaming back. From the stories they told, one was able to piece together the picture of rapid disintegration within the Third Reich that Hitler boasted would last 1000 years. It was obvious that the end of the war was now only a matter of days or hours, and that the "Lucky 13th" would not be needed.

STUTTGART MISSION CALLED OFF

There had been a few days when it looked as if the 326th might yet be thrown in. The fenced-off operations tent suddenly became active and guards were posted. Preparations were again being started, glider loads announced. Shortly after the maps for this new mission arrived, the alert was called off. The plan had been for the Regiment to seize positions in the rear of some Nazi S.S. units in the vicinity of Stuttgart. Instead, the French First Army took care of the situation and the 326th was again in the clear.

V-E DAY

As far as the men themselves were concerned, this "marshalling area period" had very little of the "martial" in it. The volley-ball courts caused a number of casualties, as did the "eau de vie" of the neighboring French cities. Passes were given to Rheims, Melun, Meaux, and Paris. Although many may wish to describe to their wives the wonderous Pomeroy Champagne Caves in Rheims, it is less likely that Rainbow Corners and Pigalle will be as freely discussed—except at future Legion Conventions.

Momentous events occurred rapidly. The news of President Roosevelt's death came as a shock. The Russians entered Berlin, and the world learned that Adolph Hitler had met his ignoble end in its ruins. When the actual end of the war came, it was an anti-climax. Although the men were certainly glad that Europe was now liberated, they could not be elated, for the Pacific now loomed as an immediate prospect.

RETURN TO SENS

It seemed strange to return to Sens. During the six weeks the Regiment was away, the war in Europe had ended. The troops, apprehensive of the future, pondered the possibilities: redeployment to the Pacific battle fronts, or occupation in Germany. With time, it became apparent that their virginal status gave them a high priority for redeployment to the Pacific.

EXTRA-CURRICULA ACTIVITIES

On May 18 the entire Regiment had reassembled and a comprehensive training schedule, embodying night problems, close order drill, marches, inspections, orientation, and athletics, was set into operation. The mere thought of enduring again the rigors of night problems and marches was sufficient cause for many to unearth buried or undeveloped athletic talents. The number of men on special duty with the A&R Office soared to unheralded heights.

The athletic and recreation program was started on a large scale. Sport fields and swimming spots were requisitioned. "Bars and Stripes," a burlesque on our experiences in France, was put into rehearsal. A more extensive program of company, battalion, and regimental dances was planned and set into motion.

The Third Battalion was selected to parade in Paris on Memorial Day. They were reviewed by a host of top Allied officials including the United States Ambassador to France, the Honorable Jefferson Caffrey, and the Military Governor of Paris, General Koenig. A commendable report on their performance was received from Major General Ralph Smith, American Military Attache in Paris.

After the parade one of the GI's wanted to buy a fountain pen so he found a "magasin" and asked the modest lady behind the counter, in a blustering facsimile of this new tongue, that he wanted a "ploom" that you don't have to dip. She looked at him patiently, withstood his spiel and then asked quite eloquently in English, "You mean you want a fountain pen?"

PASSES TO PARIS

Vivid memories are retained of the extra-curricula

activities . . . The grey-stoned Red Cross Club, coffee and donuts . . . the simple luxury of a bath and the pretty bathhouse girl who drew the water . . . the infamous house with the barred windows, blue doors, and patrolling M.P.'s . . . company dances at the Hotel de Ville . . . religious ceremonies in the magnificent single-spired, eleventh century, Cathedrale de St. Etienne . . . the house in which Jeanine or Denise lived . . . elbow bending at your favorite cafe where you knew the proprietor well enough to get the non-poisonous cognac . . . swimming, sun-bathing, and Sunday afternoon dances at Brididi . . . the odors that attended the open-air urinals on the Boulevard . . . Jascha Heifetz's memorable performance . . . the Bastille Day parade . . . slim-hipped girls riding bicycles . . . discussions in psychology class . . . the approaches of the Black-marketeer. Yes, there's much to remember, and much we'll purposely try to forget about those days.

Passes to Paris, excursions to Pigalle, were a popular, albeit expensive, way to spend a day. Then came the opportunities for furloughs to the United Kingdom or to Nice, the resort area on the French Riviera. The boys returned with inviting tales of Scotch, steaks, beautiful women, white sheets, and lazy comforts.

Much interest was stimulated by the educational opportunities offered by world-renowned universities in France and England.

HOMEWARD BOUND

Before the educational program could shift out of low gear, a warning order arrived from Division alerting the Regiment. To most, this revocation of their reprieve until November came as a startling surprise. It was evident that the speeded-up schedule of operations in the Pacific had effected a revision in our redeployment date.

There was but a brief time to prepare. Men on furlough were recalled. The Regimental Open Dance in the Market Place, July 22, was billed as the last dance in Sens. On the main floor of the covered market a huge crowd of dancers would-be dancers and spectators jostled one another. In the gallery, French vied with Americans for the free "vin blanc." For some, the starlit summer night was more attracting, and before the dance was over, many couples had drifted away from the throng for a last intimate promenade.

By July 25, farewells had been said, duffle bags packed, individual bedding rolled, and the barracks inspected for the last time. A whistle, and the men fell out in front of the Caserne. Then out the gate and the final march through the narrow, cobble-stoned streets of Sens to the station across the River Yonne.

At the railroad station, we were gratified to renew acquaintance with our old friends, the spacious French-style pullmans, which can comfortably accommodate forty men and eight horses.

The Regiment left Sens in three train-loads. The 2nd Battalion, which pulled out next to last, was the only group that met with any mis-adventure. When some three hours out of Sens, the engine and three lead "coaches" jumped the track. No one was injured, but a long delay was necessitated.

PITTSBURGH

On July 26, the Regiment arrived at Mourmelon le Grand, rail terminal for Camp Pittsburgh, one of the redeployment assembly camps, and laden with equipment, the men marched to our Regimental area.

The days were warm, but the nights were so cold that extra blankets and overcoats were standard sleeping equipment. Freed from the drudgery of K.P. and fatigue details by German P.W.'s assigned to each company, the boys played baseball and volleyball or sun-bathed. Then, when the processing of records was completed, passes were given to Rheims, scene of the German surrender.

On August 5, 500 men from the 17th Airborne Division joined the Regiment for its homeward voyage.

The Stars and Stripes was eagerly read as the war tempo in the Pacific was increased and rumors of Japanese surrender started. Then came the climatic one-two punch, the atomic bomb and U. S. S. R.'s entry into the war. The end of the war was imminent, and some feared it might mean a change in our shipping orders—Germany instead of the U. S. A.

On August 12 the outfit left Camp Pittsburgh in wooden 3rd class Kraut coaches, bound for a "cigarette" camp near Le Havre. Arriving the next day at the bombed-out railroad depot in Le Havre, the men piled into awaiting trucks. They rode through pillbox-studded, rubble-laden sections of the city, up the steep hill to Camp Herbert Tareyton, situated on the bluffs overlooking the port.

V-J DAY

Cards and magazines helped to pass the few days while they were waiting for their ships to be readied. On August 15, Japan capitulated. Though jubilant over the news, the occupation of Japan still loomed ominously on the horizon.

The day before leaving, francs were exchanged for good, green American dollars. Trucks took them down the hill, through the devastated city to the docks. The ever-present American Red Cross clubmobile was on hand dispensing best wishes, cigarettes, and the inevitable coffee and doughnuts. The haunting fear of a possible last-minute cancellation of shipping orders was only now beginning to dissipate.

Struggling under the double burden of duffle bag and full field roll, the men filed happily up the gangplank. Nearly 3600 troops wedged into two overcrowded Victory ships, the Cranston Victory and the Georgetown Victory. Men slept on bunks in the compartments, on the hatches—in fact, on every available foot of floor space. They willingly suffered such minor inconvenience, because every movement brought them nearer home.

The men of the Regiment wish to extend their best wishes to Col. Poindexter, former commanding officer of the 326th Glider Infantry, and to Col. Hinton, former commanding officer of the 88th Glider Infantry, and to express their appreciation for the privilege of having served with them.

HOME

Nine days of ocean; nine days of furlough planning and day-dreaming; nine days that took the Regiment from the havoc of Europe to the haven of the New York Harbor. The official welcoming yacht came alongside, and one could see the attractive "greeting committee" of New York show girls and debutantes, and hear the latest tunes from the brassy Special Service Band. After the yacht had left, the tugs started pushing the liner toward the pier.

The Georgetown Victory, carrying the Regimental Staff, Special Units, and the 2nd Battalion, had left Le Havre August 15, and arrived in New York the 25th. The Cranston Victory, with the 1st and 3rd Battalions aboard, had sailed on August 19, and arrived in the New York Harbor on the 27th.

Those who landed from the Georgetown Victory went by ferry and train from the Staten Island pier up the Hudson River to Camp Shanks. Those from the Cranston, loaded on trains at the Staten Island dock and went directly to Camp Kilmer, New Jersey.

From these Debarkation Centers the men were classified into geographical units for shipment to regional Reception Centers. From there they received furloughs.

The 326th had completed the circuit. It was home again . . .

BOOK VII

- ★ CENTRAL EUROPE (DIVISION)
- ★ RHINELAND (517th Combat Team)
- ★ ARDENNES " " "
- ★ SOUTHERN FRANCE " " "
- ★ ROME-ARNO " " "

THIS fine book is not only the answer to the soldier's desire for a souvenir, but also a treasure house containing the narrative of the operations and travels of the 517th Parachute Infantry Regiment, from its activation till its return from overseas. All of this is supported by many fine pictures and sketches, that enable one to have a graphic account of the operations of each unit in the Regiment.

There is, at the present time, a tendency to wish to forget about the war, and everything connected with it. The interest in the battle records of the units participating in World War II will renew with the passing of the years however, and this book will become of increasing value and importance.

I know that I shall hold this book in high regard, and have it continually on display in the living room of my home as a constant reminder of old acquaintances, scenes, and experiences.

THE HISTORY OF THE 517th PARACHUTE INFANTRY REGIMENT

THE 517th Parachute Infantry Regiment was presented its colors and officially activated under the command of Colonel Lewis A. Walsh, Jr., on the Fifteenth of March, 1943, at Toccoa, Georgia. During the next two years, this Regiment, the youngest in the United States Army, was to blaze a trail through basic training, The Parachute School, Tennessee Maneuvers, and on to the ultimate proving grounds on the Battle Fields of Europe. Campaigns were fought in Italy, France, Belgium, and Germany, and the 517th achieved outstanding success in all of them.

The Regiment was alerted for overseas shipment while on Tennessee Maneuvers, and ordered back to Camp Mackall for its final preparations. It was then that Colonel Rupert D. Graves assumed command of the 517th, and a Combat Team was formed by the attachment to the Regiment of the 460th Parachute Field Artillery Battalion and the 596 Airborne Engineer Company.

Stage Towers of Parachute School, Ft. Benning, Ga.

Maneuvers

THE Combat Team sailed from Newport News, Virginia, on the seventeenth of May, 1944, on the U. S. S. Santa Rosa, a converted luxury-liner. The Special Service Section and three detachments of WACs on board did much to alleviate the monotony of the trip and provided many forms of amusement for the entire Command.

Two weeks after sailing, on the 31st of May, 1944, the ship arrived at the beautiful, but war-torn city of Naples. The voyage by sea was over, but the eve of battle was near.

After the debarkation, a bivouac was established in an extinct volcano crater, equipment was made ready, sea-legs worked out, training conducted, and time was allotted for the all important passes to the near-by points of interest.

U.S.S. Santa Rosa

Naples

Camp was broken on the fourteenth of June; and the Regiment boarded LSTs for the trip to Civitavecchia, and combat, with the 36th Division. On the morning of June 18, 1944, men of "B" Company, acting as an advance guard, rounded a corner to be met by a blast of enemy machine gun fire. The first of many battles for the 517th had commenced.

The First Battalion, commanded by Major William J. Boyle, was the leading element for the combat team, with "B" Company furnishing the advance guard. The long months of training payed off when fighting began; and although the actions were usually severe, the men were always able to overcome the opposition and push on to their objective.

When the fighting commenced, the Second Battalion under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Richard J. Sietz moved around to the right flank, forcing the Germans to withdraw; but not before heavy casualties had been inflicted on them.

The 517th pushed on rapidly to prevent the reorganization of the enemies' defenses. The Second Battalion moved on Montesaio, and took it on the evening of June 19th. Lieutenant Colonel Melvin Zais's Third Battalion moved to the left and pushed through Montepescali to take Sticciano the night of June 20th, which was spent below the village in consolidated positions against counter attack.

The following day the Combat Team moved out in the rear of the 142nd Infantry to a position east of Follonica. On the morning of the twenty-fourth the Second Battalion struck to the left, and moved through the northeast section of Follonica, where it encountered heavy enemy resistance. Overcoming this, they pushed on and took the dominating ground to the front.

The Third Battalion moved from the outskirts of Gavarrano before dusk of the same day on a historic march that took them through the German lines under cover of darkness. Discarding all noisy equipment and using liberated mules for the transportation of supplies, they slipped, by swift, silent movements, through the enemy lines unobserved, to occupy the high ground above the Cornia River Valley.

The Second Battalion reverted to Regimental Reserve. The First Battalion moved through the Third's positions at noon, crossing the Cornia River Valley behind a screen of friendly artillery fire, and was given the mission of taking the high ground facing the Suvereto River Valley. They attacked up the slopes of Mount Peloso under heavy enemy mortar and artillery fire, and sporadic bursts from small arms. By evening of the same day, the First Battalion had occupied the crest of the hill, and all positions were held despite desperate counter attacks by the Germans, attempting to dislodge the Troopers.

All elements of the 517th were relieved the morning of June 26 by the 442nd Japanese-American combat team. The Regiment had become in the short space of a week a group of seasoned veterans, and they were pulled back to the area of Frascati on the outskirts of Rome to prepare for the invasion of Southern France.

The month of July was a pleasant break in the realities of war. While training was carried on and supplies of new equipment were issued, there was plenty of time for relaxation. P X rations were distributed, U S O shows arrived, athletic tournaments were held, and a constant stream of Troopers ebbed and flowed through the Eternal City . . .

By the middle of August, plans had been completed for the next operation, which was to be the invasion of Southern France. The 517th moved to marshalling areas at air ports to the north of Rome. The preparations and briefing were over all too soon. Chutes were drawn, the men loaded into C-47s, and in the early morning hours of August 15th, the Regiment took off and was on its way toward the goal of every Paratrooper, an Airborne spearhead for an attacking army.

Final Preparations for Jump into Southern France

Pattern Jump

At 0430 hours the sky over Le Muy, France filled with chutes and the attack was under way. The action throughout the next three days threw the Germans into a state of chaos. Enemy convoys were attacked, communication lines were severed, and towns and villages were occupied as the Troopers fought toward their objectives. Le Muy, La Motte, Les Arcs, and Draguignan became names to be remembered. Part of Lt. Colonel Zais' Third Battalion assembled and proceeded to Clapiers shattering enemy installations as they went. Remaining elements of the Battalion had landed in the hills east of Tourettes, were joined by British Paratroopers, combined forces, and annihilated a large enemy convoy speeding reinforcements to cities in the South.

Lt. Colonel Boyle and forty men of his First Battalion made a gallant stand at Les Arcs. The Second Battalion pushed through to reinforce them as the Germans began massing their troops on the outskirts of Les Arcs for an all-out counter attack. The Third Battalion arrived on the scene, the Regiment consolidated, and attacked, overcoming the German positions. Thus the way was cleared for the beach head forces to push on through toward the North.

On D plus 4, after the reorganization of the combat team near Chateau St. Rosseline, the Second Battalion was charged with the taking of Fayence, and the Third Battalion started in to Callian. The First Battalion was held in reserve, and other units used in direct support of these missions. The morning of the 21st saw both of these objectives taken.

St. Cezaire fell to "G" and "I" Companies on the morning of the 22nd of August when, after "G" Company had become pinned down, Company "I" surged through heavy fire up mountainous slopes to take the town, thus earning a commendation from Major General Robert T. Frederick, Commanding General of the First Airborne Task Force.

St. Vallier, Grasse, Bouyon, and La Rocquette fell in quick succession to the rapidly moving 517th within the next two weeks. In the attack on La Rocquette, "E" Company distinguished itself and also earned a commendation from the Commanding General.

The combat team's momentum in the late summer was stalled by a line of enemy fortifications extending from the Maritime Alps in Southern France to the Sea. The Germans attempted to hold the French constructed forts at all costs, but on September 5th, "D" Company attacked through them and succeeded in taking the high ground north of Col de Braus while under heavy fire. After terrific fighting, "G" and "H" Companies finally succeeded in taking Col de Braus, a step toward the heavily defended Sospel Valley. The same day the First Battalion supported by a battery of the 460th Parachute Field Artillery Battalion pressed into Piera Cava. The red letter day of the "Champagne Campaign" was September 18th when Ventebren and Tete de Lavina were taken by the Second and Third Battalions with a total cost of only four casualties.

Piera Cava, Southern France

Wrecked Glider, Southern France

The remainder of September was spent by the 517th digging defensive positions in and around Piera Cava along a thinly held fifteen mile front, using mines and booby traps to take the place of Troopers, of which there were far too few. Attacks on hill 1098 ended the month with the roar of artillery duels echoing through the valleys of the Maritime Alps.

The one respite from the horrors of war during the siege of Sospel, was Nice. Men were called from the front lines and given passes to share the rewards of liberation, and walk with the belles of Cote d'Azur. The next day they would be back in the lines and the rigors of war, with the hope that another pass would come in time.

Parachute and Glider Obstacles, Southern France

"Taking a Break," Southern France

Despite heavy artillery, on the 29th of October a large patrol from "F" Company pushed into Sospel. The Germans withdrew, and "B" Company moved up through the village to push on and occupy Mt. Agaisen, without opposition later the same day.

The siege of Sospel was over after fifty-one days of continuous fighting and the combat team fanned out over the valley to the front in pursuit of the enemy.

The battle was terminated on the 17th of November. It was called the "Champagne Campaign," but for the men who were doing the fighting there was no semblance of gaiety and only a succession of tortuous days and nights under fire.

The Regiment marched forty-eight kilometers over the mountain and down into the sunny Riviera near Nice. During the next three weeks the men tried to make up for all the things that make life enjoyable, and had been all but forgotten during the days of combat. The Promenade des Anglais, the Avenue de la Victoire, the Place Massena, and the pleasure spots of night life, Queens, Maxim's, and Christie's became as familiar as the main streets and back yards at home.

On the 6th and 7th of December the combat team moved from La Colle to entrain at Antibes. The men and baggage were crowded into small 40 and 8's with a destination of Soissons, a famous battle ground of World War I. The slow, uneventful trip ended on the morning of the 12th, and the column filed through the still sleeping town to be greeted by the welcome sight of barracks for the first time overseas. The holiday season was near, and plans were being made for a gala Christmas, when Von Rundstedt started his break through, and changed visions of turkey to trenches.

The 517th was alerted and two days later sped northward. Worried clusters of Belgians stood on street corners in threatened Namur as the column of Troopers rushed through enroute to the front on the 22nd of December.

Orders were given directing the First Battalion to the Third Armored Division sector near Soy, Belgium where pressure from German armor made the situation so fluid that it was impossible to tell exactly where the front began. Major General Maurice Rose, Commanding General of the Third Armored Division personally attached "C" Company of the First Battalion to his Task Force Kane. This unit alone held the key point on which the western front hinged just prior to Christmas 1944.

The rest of the First Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Boyle, detrucked northeast of Soy, and was immediately ordered to attack along the highway leading from Soy to Hotton. The situation was so critical that no rest could be allowed for the troops even though they had just completed a twenty-three hour trip.

The missions of the Battalion were to take the commanding ground around the road junction at Hais Hits, where the Germans were well dug in, capture the high ground at Sou-Les-Hys, and break through to the surrounded Third Armored Division garrison at Hotton.

Company "B" led the attack but, due to the heavy fire encountered from automatic weapons and tanks, it became necessary for "A" Company to by pass the original route to Hotton. While this maneuver saved casualties, it was necessary to fight for every foot gained along the entire route.

On the return from Hotton to Soy, the fighting was as severe as on the trip in. However, the mission was so well executed despite the fanatical enemy resistance, that the First Battalion is to be awarded the Presidential Unit Citation for the action.

Belgium Town, Ardennes Campaign

"Stavelot, Belgium"

The morning of the 25th broke bright and clear and as the men celebrated the day in fox holes with a cold "K" ration for dinner one of the greatest aerial engagements of the war was fought overhead.

The next day the 517th received one of its most important assignments when ordered by the XVIII Airborne Corps to take Manhay at any costs. Manhay had been reclaimed by the Second SS Panzers, the unit responsible for the atrocities at Malmedy earlier in the Break Through, and its recapture was important because the little Belgian town contained a junction of five roads, and commanded the all important highway through Werbemont to Liege. It was a crucial sector that the enemy needed to launch its attack toward a city that must be held, Liege.

The task of leading the attack into Manhay was given to the Third Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Paxton. The twenty-five minute barrage from fifteen supporting artillery Battalions shattered the enemy defenses, enabling the Paratroopers to take it with little opposition. An enemy counter attack supported by tanks began almost immediately but was driven off within an hour, and the village secured. It was in Manhay that Rundstedt's drive was halted, and his hopes for a quick thrust northward were frustrated.

On January 3rd, the 517th acting as the left flank regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division struck south along the Salm River. The 551st Parachute Infantry Battalion on the right, fought through Basse Bodeux, and the Second Battalion of the 517th took Trois Ponts, advancing toward Monte de Fosse where they were held up by heavy enemy fire. At 2400 hours the First Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Boyle, of the 517th, moved up through the area already taken to St. Jacques and Bergeval seizing the towns.

On the 5th of January the Third Battalion pushed on across the Salm River to the east. In the meantime Major Robert E. McMahon had succeeded Lieutenant Colonel Boyle who had been wounded near Bergeval.

The Malmedy Massacre

The Regiment, less the 2nd Battalion, was attached to the 106th Division for the attack across the L'Ambleve River, between Stavelot and Trois Ponts. Henumont, Logbierme, and Poteaux soon fell despite determined enemy resistance, and the fight ended with the 517th attached to the 30th Infantry Division. The Second Battalion, commanded by Lieutenant Colonel Richard J. Seitz, plunged into the defenses of St. Vith with elements of the 7th Armored Division. With the capturing of this city, the Germans last foothold in the Ardennes was wiped out.

Soon after the victory at St. Vith, the combat team moved to Stavelot and was billeted there for a short rest. For the first time in many weeks the Troopers slept in beds instead of fox holes and had roofs over their heads. Time was taken for thawing out and eating the meals that had never arrived when they were most needed.

On the 4th of February Colonel Graves received orders to move the 517th from Stavelot to Germany, and to join the 82nd Airborne Division near Honfeld and Hesheim. Two days later, the Regiment was attached to the 78th Division. The column moved out by truck convoy, and within a few hours had passed the idle tank traps and shattered pill boxes of the Siegfried Line into Rotgen, and through the Hurtgen Forest en route to Bergstein.

The Second and Third Battalions moved out of Bergstein at 2400 hours of the 6th against a high ridge east of the Roer River defended by the German First Parachute Army. The 517th's mission was to occupy this ridge cutting off the enemy's escape route from Schmidt.

Numerous obstacles had been thrown up to prevent the crossing of the river and to help repel attacks. The Germans had had six weeks in which to prepare their positions and had made the most of them by building reinforced cement emplacements, and laying one of the largest mine fields ever seen in Europe. The 596th Parachute Engineers worked heroically while under heavy artillery fire removing the mines, and clearing a path for the 517th.

The battle grew in intensity and by twilight of the second day had reached a violent pitch. An artillery duel was being waged by both sides with the men in the fox holes always on the receiving end. The cross roads that had been in an insignificant sector turned, over night, into the most hotly contested area on the western front. The attack continued with "A" Company assaulting Zerkall and on the 8th, the Second Battalion cut through a net work of trip wires to push almost to the river where mortar and small arms fire halted their advance.

German soldiers killed during the Ardennes Campaign

The Regiment kept up continuous pressure against enemy positions and fulfilled their slogan "ATTACK" up till the last moment when they were relieved by the 508th Parachute Infantry on the morning of February 8th.

The 517th pulled back out of the lines to Laon and then again by "40 and 8" moved to Joigny, where they became officially assigned to the 13th Airborne Division, commanded by Major General Elbridge G. Chapman, Jr., on 1 March 1945. This Division had only recently arrived overseas and was eager to be given the chance to prove itself in combat, so once again the 517th started preparing and training for its next mission. The training period for the Regiment during the next few weeks was actually one of relaxation after the trials of warfare. Anything the men didn't find in the way of amusement in Joigny could be found in Paris where the fondest dreams became realities. Any night of the week men of the 517th could be found strolling down the Champs Elysees or in the Montmartre at one of the far famed night clubs. Numerous sidewalk cafes kept life from becoming dull and the Mademoiselles were always willing to brighten the Troopers stay.

The main effort of American forces switched to the Asiatic Theater where Allied Armies were making an all out bid for an early victory. The 13th Airborne Division was alerted for overseas shipment and the 517th packed its equipment for what was to be the last move. The move was made to Camp Pittsburgh, then to Camp Philip Morris, and on to Le Havre, the port of embarkation. Here the Regiment was divided into two groups one boarding the U. S. S. ONEIDA VICTORY and the other the U. S. S. MADAWASKA VICTORY, both ships sailing by 14th of August 1945. Two days out from

The advancing American armies crossed the Rhine in March and once again the 517th was alerted. The Regiment moved to a marshalling area near Bapaume at air field B-54. Missions were assigned to jump into areas ahead of the forces spear heading the American attack. Briefing was completed and final preparations made, but at the last minute friendly units over ran the drop zones and the missions were canceled. This happened three times before the surrender of Germany. The last hope for another Airborne mission in Europe died with the fall of Germany and the Regiment pulled back to Joigny early in June.

Le Havre hostilities with the Japanese ceased, and because of this, redeployment orders to the South Pacific were later to be canceled.

Arriving—New York Harbor

Both ships arrived in New York City by the 22nd of August, and the Regiment moved to Camp Shanks for processing. All members of the Command were given forty-five day furloughs, men with enough points were given discharges, and the few that were left reported to Fort Bragg, North Carolina to pass on to the new men who were to refill the ranks of the depleted regiment, the lessons they had learned in war.

The cycle of war for the 517th Parachute Infantry Regiment had been completed. It had gone from training to combat overseas, and back to training in the States. Its mission had been completed and it could now enjoy the fruits of victory till some time in the future, when once again its men may be called on to uphold the traditions it has established.

BOOK VIII

Col. Harvey J. Jablonsky,
Commanding Officer

TO THE MEN OF THE 515th PARACHUTE

This regiment, since its activation on 31 May 1943, has established an enviable record. The Esprit de Corps, loyalty, cooperation, and enthusiasm shown by officers and men of this regiment has been portrayed in the efficient execution of the many tasks and missions assigned to us.

Memories of our past record may be dimmed by age. For that reason this book will have a sentimental interest as well as an historical interest to all of us. It will bring to mind many associations and friendships within our Regiment and within our Division. They are lasting, a part of our life which cannot be taken from us.

Whether at work or at play, we have always given our best. It is my hope and desire that each of you of the 515th has profited by your stay in the Regiment. This Regiment has been a better regiment for having you in it. May the pictorial record which follows be a lasting reminder of a part of your service in the Army of the United States.

HISTORY OF THE 515th

ALTHOUGH the Five-Fifteenth has been fully activated for over two years it is, comparatively, the "baby" of U. S. Army Parachute Regiments. It was initially set up in the Alabama Area of Ft. Benning, Georgia, May 31, 1943, to serve as an administrative agency for the pool of officers and enlisted graduates of The Parachute School. It was not until December 1, 1943 that orders came down from Airborne Command placing the 515th in full activation.

Colonel Julian B. Lindsey took command of the "Jumping Wolves," with the then Lt. Colonel Harvey J. Jablonsky as Executive Officer. From an original cadre of 184 non-coms, from the 507th Parachute Infantry, the 515th soon expanded into a full-strength regiment.

First Fatality

The first parachute jump of the Regiment was recorded on June 18, 1943, when one stick composed of the cadre personnel, jumped over the Alabama Area. Parachute jumping gradually developed into an integral part of the training program.

During these preliminary stages a tragic incident in the life of the Regiment occurred when the popular commander of the First Battalion, Lt. Colonel J. C. Hite, plunged to his death during a jump over the Alabama Area. The Amphitheatre in this area has since been named in his memory.

While stationed in the Frying Pan Area of Benning late in 1943, the First Battalion was brought up to strength by an influx of qualified jumpers. In December of that year, the Second and Third Battalions, including unqualified men from Special Units, started "A" Stage training preparatory to entering Jump School. By January 29, the entire organization was wearing its wings.

Join 13th

In February 1944, the Regiment packed, said its farewells to Ft. Benning, and entrained for Camp Mackall, North Carolina. On March 7, 1944 it became part of the Thirteenth Airborne Division, replacing the 513th Parachute Infantry.

In April and May the unit was hit hard when the majority of its best trained men shipped to the European and Pacific theatres as much-needed replacements. Most of these men, transferring out in three large groups, went to the 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions in Europe. Later they figured prominently in the D-day invasion of Normandy and the invasion of Southern France. The remainder were sent to the 11th Airborne Division in the Pacific.

Since the shipments to the other Airborne divisions had again depleted the 515th's ranks, the "Jumping Wolf" Regiment received men from the 541st Regiment to fill its skeleton squads. These replacements filled the holes left in line companies and men with long experience were inter-mingled with newcomers ready to learn the importance of Airborne tactics and technique.

Strenuous air and ground training was started in preparation for an overseas move. In the next seven months the men were welded into a parachute unit capable of any mission.

In the fall of 1944, twenty-three American paratroopers of Japanese descent were attached to the Regiment to aid in final phases of training. In field problems, half of these men took the part of the enemy while the other half were used as interpreters. Members of the Regiment as well as the attached interpreters found this training invaluable. When it became evident that the 515th was not going to the Pacific, this group departed. These men were highly respected by the Regiment, who fully realized the dangerous missions to which they would be assigned.

Maneuvers

By mid-September the Regiment was ready for its biggest training test—Airborne maneuvers with the 13th Division. The 515th traveled with the Division to the Laurinburg-Maxton Air Base, which was to serve as the base of operations.

The problem was to be a night operation with the initial objective of capturing the “enemy-held” airfield at Camp Mackall. The plan called for the 515th Combat Team to drop on three drop zones in the vicinity of Camp Mackall, and to be reinforced by glider troops which were to land at dawn of the following day.

The execution was not exactly according to plan. The combination of a high wind the night of the jump with many inexperienced pilots, caused the Regiment to be scattered over a wide area, thereby making the ground assembly very difficult. In spite of the difficulties encountered, the Regiment attained its initial objective by capturing the airport at Camp Mackall.

Never to be forgotten by those who participated in the maneuvers was the march from the first bivouac area, when the ground phase began. The men formed along the road and put themselves into the hands of “Pierre” Tully, whose intrepid demolitions section had built “bridges” across Drowning and Naked Creeks. This officer was charged with the safe guidance of the Regiment through the morass and muck of Drowning Creek Swamp. Luminous paint was applied to the backs of helmets, and tape strung through the swamp served to guide the men of the 515th on their way. At the “Tully Bridges,” the troops ganged up as, one by one, the men slithered across the creek. An unidentified trooper, tired of it all, fell asleep leaning against a tree. Behind him, hundreds of patient buddies waited, knee-deep in mud, as the column in front moved ahead. Reaching land at the other end of the quagmire, the troops fell asleep in their tracks and waited for the “lost battalion.” After an hour, the prodigals crept silently out of the night.

Regrouping as rapidly as possible, the Regiment fought through the problems of maneuvers, setting an enviable mark, while learning the lessons and tactics of fighting as a unit.

At the completion of the maneuvers the Regiment made preparations for movement overseas. The men had proved themselves ready for combat. Long days in the field had welded them into a cooperative, foot-slogging group of disciplined soldiers, capable of enduring any hardship. The runs, marches and sleepless nights of the previous months had built up a stamina and a determination for action.

Jerd

The ever-present excitement during a jump will usually cause equipment bundles to be released too early or too late to hit the drop zone. Consequently, especially after a night jump, this equipment is not put into service until the next morning. In combat, a large amount of it is never recovered.

Pvt. P. L. Foreman, of Headquarters Company, developed a harness by means of which the men of a rifle platoon could leave a plane with all of their equipment on their bodies and be off the field in ten minutes without losing a single article.

The equipment is carried in an adjustable harness, named JERD (Jumper's Equipment Release Device), which is attached to the body of the parachutist. The reserve chute, instead of being on the main harness, is secured to the trooper's equipment bundle which rides on his chest and stomach. After leaving the plane, and after his main chute opens, the jumper simply works three couplings and the bundle drops. The reserve is opened by a twenty-five foot static line. This line also serves as a tow line, keeping the equipment chute from drifting away from the jumper. Of course, the reserve can be used as intended, and the load jettisoned, if the main chute fails to function.

The first demonstration of a platoon using the JERD harness was at Camp Mackall in December, 1944, before Maj. Gen. Chapman, Thirteenth Airborne Commander, Brig. Gen. Monroe, and officers from Airborne Center and other parachute units.

Ready for ETO

General Chapman presented the 515th with its Regimental Colors at a Division Review on November 18th.

During this month the Regiment was readied for movement overseas only to receive a sixty-day delay. Finally, the jumping infantrymen were ready to move. On January 18, 1945 the unit was bundled off under a tight security veil — destination, the port of embarkation in New York—Camp Shanks.

At Camp Shanks, new clothing was issued freely. Physical checkups, shots, gas chamber, mock abandonship drill were part of the routine. By the fifth day the Regiment was P. O. Ed.'d completely. In the barracks, men shot "craps," played poker or read as they awaited the final order to embark.

At last the order came on January 25th. The troops poured from the barracks, formed and marched to the Shanks rail station. It was bitter cold and overshoes creaked on the hard-packed snow. The train ride was pleasant compared to the miserable ferry-boat. It seemed hours before the pudgy tubs backed into the Bush Terminal slips and unloaded the half-frozen troopers. To many, it seemed as though they were making the Atlantic crossing on ferries. At the terminal, Red Cross workers were waiting with coffee and crullers. Loading started immediately. Shortly, ships moved from their berths and the convoy assembled.

The voyage was uneventful. Stories of submarines and mines were rampant, but nothing happened. Rigid safety regulations were enforced aboard ship.

Reach France

Thirteen days later the crowded transport moved into the harbor of Portsmouth, England, where the ship rode at anchor overnight. Making the short Channel crossing next day, February 8th, the men disembarked at the badly beaten port of Le Havre and entrained for Camp Lucky Strike, near St. Valery en Caux, France. It was at Camp Lucky Strike that the Regiment acquired its new Commanding Officer, Col. Harvey J. Jablonsky, who had been in the European Theater for some months as an observer prior to the Regiment's arrival.

While waiting for orders to move from Lucky Strike the troops occupied themselves with a new game called "Helmets and Gravel." This proved to be a very delightful pastime and was played with much enthusiasm.

The rules were simple. The men lined up in single file and circled a large pile of gravel. Several "players" with shovels filled each man's helmet with gravel as he passed. Then the "Helmeters," as they were called, filed away happily to the tent areas and dumped the gravel in marked-off rows between the tents called "sidewalks." If a sidewalk was completed before the mud swallowed all the gravel, the "players" scored one point. One of the best features of this new game was that only enlisted men could participate. Many officers watched longingly from the sidelines. They were good sports about not being able to play, however, and shouted encouragingly to the "players," especially to the less talented that fell behind.

Nine days quickly passed. Then came the order to proceed to the St. Valery Railroad Station to entrain for the journey to Auxerre, the base station. Tents and areas were policed, packs rolled, TAT boxes were loaded on trucks. The Regiment was on the march.

This delightful promenade to the train will be remembered by many. Affectionately dubbed the "Death March" by some of the less stalwart, it proved to be a test of something or other. . . . To avoid the possibility of any man suffering from an unforeseen cold spell, the uniform included woolen underwear, wool O. D.'s; combat jacket and trousers, overcoat, overshoes, steel helmets, and any extra garments a man thought he needed. With full packs and rifles slung, the men were snug and comfortable. . . . The officer guiding the columns generously included several side trips. This was without a doubt intended to give the men a glimpse of rural France and all its old-world loveliness.

The station at St. Valery was finally reached without a casualty.

Marshalling Area Scenes

Arrive at Auxerre

It was night when the train wheezed into the station at Auxerre. The troops detrained and marched to the Caserne Vauban, their new quarters. They got their first glimpse of this ancient city, a town of 22,000 inhabitants. It has been an important trade and agricultural center since the days of the Romans. The former French Garrison, with its four-story barracks, soon became "Home" to the men of the Regiment. So, too, did Auxerre with its narrow winding streets, the towering Fourteenth Century Cathedral, the Marche Couvert, the Yonne River, and the Arbres Secs Park.

At the Caserne Vauban, the debris left by the hastily departed Boche was heaped in the quadrangle. Busy Troopers, emulating beavers, carried broken chairs from the buildings and added them to the junk pile. Old stoves were discarded by one company, only to be joyously claimed by another. Within a week every bit of furniture, broken or not, had found a new home. The Regiment was settled, ready for what might come.

Operation Comet

Less than a month after arrival on the continent, orders came down from Division alerting the unit for a mission, Operation Comet. This acted as a sudden dash of cold water in the faces of the men who had been busily engaged in cleaning and maintenance of the Caserne while inaugurating a program of basic training review and familiarization with foreign weapons. Although Operation Comet was actually a practice mission, enlisted personnel were not informed of its nature until the day prior to the jump. On March 10th the Regiment moved out, still under the impression that the mission was to be a jump into combat. Allied armies at that time were aligned inside Germany along the bridgeless barrier of the Rhine. Therefore, an airborne spearhead across this river barrier seemed to the men to be the next logical move.

The First Battalion moved out to airfields at St. Andre, the Second Battalion to Dreux, and the Third Battalion and Regimental Headquarters to Orleans. D-day for Operation Comet was March 13th. Following the jump near Joigny, the unit was organized and moved out to capture objectives in the vicinity of Busey en Othe and Paroy en Othe. Operation Comet was a success. Six days after the men had left for the marshalling fields, they returned to Auxerre.

Path Finders

Airborne Operations are preceded by specialized troops — Pathfinders — who jump into enemy territory with Radar equipment to direct the troop transports over the DZ's.

When the 515th first landed in France, several volunteers from the Regiment were sent to the Pathfinder School, conducted by the Eighteenth Corps in Chalgrove, Oxford, England. One of the men from this group remained with corps and is credited with being among the first American soldiers to jump into Germany. The remainder rejoined the Regiment—just returned from Operation Comet—at Auxerre.

The next operation, "Choker II," was the real McCoy. The operation was planned as a crossing of the Rhine at Worms in front of the Seventh Army. However, only 48 hours before D-day for the operation, the Third Army crossed the Rhine and secured a bridgehead, north of Worms, thereby obviating the need for an airborne crossing.

On April Fool's Day, 1945, came still another alert. The Regiment again entrained at the Auxerre rail station. The weary 40 and 8's made another spasmodic journey, terminating at Amiens. The Second and Third Battalions entrucked for marshalling areas at Poix, and the First Battalion and Special Units for a marshalling area near Boves.

Shortly after their arrival at marshalling areas the Regiment was alerted for "Operation Effective." This, too, was cancelled—this time due to the Seventh Army's untimely haste in overrunning our DZ south of Stuttgart. The harassed Troopers were disappointed, but were reminded of the fact that "We are troops of opportunity." The companies went back within the barbed-wire confines of the marshalling fields; some to play baseball, others volleyball, and others to become ace sackmen.

V-E Day

Sporadic alerts had been turned on and off like a faucet, but, as the front-line troops cut deeper into Germany, it became over less probable that the 515th would be used. Just before V-E day the first alert of Operation — into Denmark was initiated and cancelled. Finally, after a series of optimistic pre-surrender announcements, V-E day became a reality. The end of the war in Europe came suddenly, but not unexpectedly, with the Regiment still in reserve in the marshalling areas.

Upon returning to Auxerre, the men began to ponder their future status while getting acquainted with a Europe free of war. The pass policy of the Regiment became very liberal. A few made it to Paris, others received furloughs to England and the Riviera, while some were permitted educational tours of conquered Germany. Still others returned on pass to their old haunts at Amiens with its Cathedral, its bars and entertainment district.

An expanded Information and Education program was started, including unit schools with voluntary attendance to classes in French, algebra, mechanics, and many other subjects. The rank and file were combed for instructors, as willing and grateful citizens of Auxerre loaned chairs for classrooms. Privates and Colonels alike taught shop math and business management. Ace sackmen became super-sackmen.

Leave for Home

Arrangements for redeployment began on July 18. The end of July brought with it the end of the unit's stay in Auxerre. Another jolting journey was made by truck and rail to the redeployment assembly station at Camp Pittsburgh near Reims. While the processing of former 82nd and 101st Airborne Division men who had joined the 13th for reassignment went on, the rest of the 515th occupied itself with sack-duty, orientation, and sunbathing.

Sunday Concert Auxerre

Marshalling Area Quarters

At Le Havre waited the Costa Rica Victory and William and Mary Victory ships. Passing quickly through Philip Morris, a staging - area camp, the Regiment was soon at sea, destination, New York. With a gleam in every eye, the radiantly happy Troopers on the Costa Rica stayed up the last night to get their first glimpse of the welcome skyline that was Coney Island. On the morning of 23 August, the last ship unloaded at Piermont pier, up the Hudson River, near Nyack.

The processing at Camp Shanks was unbelievably fast. The welcoming officer was not bandying words when he announced that "You will be out of here within 48 hours." Delirious with anticipation of things to come, Troopers went on "recuperation furloughs," scattering to the 48 States of the Union. While on recuperation furloughs press and radio releases indicated the unit would sail for the Pacific in November. Later developments in world affairs cancelled the movement order. Reporting back to their reception centers, they were greeted with

Leaving Le Havre

Arriving Camp Shanks

15-day extensions. The Regiment started to assemble at Ft. Bragg, N. Carolina on October 14th and finally closed there about October 31st. All personnel with over 60 points were discharged at their home reception stations. Points for discharge became the chief topic of discussion and the Regiment began discharging men at a rate determined by A. S. R. scores. To fill the Regiment's depleted ranks, replacements from the Parachute School arrived. The building of a peacetime army had begun.

An active program of reenlistment in the regular army was started in November. In the first month, some 125 men reenlisted in the Regiment for 1 to 3 years.

The future of the Regiment is uncertain. Those who stay in it are fortunate. Those who have gone back to civilian life to the many vocations and avocations of pre-war days, together with those who are soon to leave, can safely say that "never a dull moment" appropriately describes life in the 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment.

HISTORY OF 13th ABN DIVISION ARTILLERY

THE History of the 13th Airborne Division Artillery is, in reality, not one history, but several; it is the combined histories of the component battalions which make Division Artillery. Although these battalions differ in age and in organization, they have run parallel courses. All have known the sandhills of North Carolina, the Parachute School at Fort Benning, and the green fields and red-roofed towns of France. It is fitting, therefore, that their history be recorded briefly, not as separate units, but as the history of a team.

Division Artillery began its existence with the activation of the Division on the 13th of August, 1943, but in a sense the real history of Division Artillery—or Div Arty, as it soon became known to all its members—did not begin until the early part of November of that year. At this time the three battalions had reached full strength, and the parachute battalion had gone to Fort Benning, Georgia, to receive parachutist training. With the return of this battalion in December, the busy months of Division Artillery training began. Training was interrupted in January '44 when the Division moved to Camp MacKall, North Carolina, but was speedily resumed, and by April Div Arty was ready for its Army Ground Forces Tests. Almost simultaneously, the Division was declared a source of overseas replacements.

The ranks of the Division's infantry regiments were seriously depleted by the furnishing of replacements, but the Artillery lost no men. Thus, during a time when other units of the Division were, of necessity, repeating large portions of past training, Division Artillery was carrying on a far more advanced program. Div Arty became the oldest intact unit in the Division, and was subsequently generally regarded as the most thoroughly trained.

As the month of September began, the men of Div Arty began readying themselves for the approaching maneuvers. Division Artillery was prepared. In July many glidermen had taken parachutist training at Fort Benning. The training had been offered in accordance with a policy of making the Division as flexible as possible, and the glidermen had responded enthusiastically. Maneuvers began September 24, with a night jump on a larger scale than had ever before been attempted in Airborne training. With the rest of the Division, Division Artillery's parachute battalion and parachutist elements of the glider battalions jumped, organized themselves swiftly after the inevitable first confusion, and made ready to receive the glider elements who followed during the night and the next morning. The first excitement of the Airborne landings was followed by a great deal of less exciting hard work. There were many movements, too many K-rations, and occasional sore feet before maneuvers were over—but in time they were over—and completely successful.

In October came a Division alert for overseas movement. Shortly afterward, however, it was announced that movement had been postponed two months. It wasn't long, though, until the 26th of January, 1945, when the units of Division Artillery departed from the New York Port of Embarkation, after a brief stay at Camp Shanks, New York. The first week in February Div Arty arrived at Le Havre, France, and, after spending a short time at Camp Lucky Strike, a near-by Staging Area, the units moved southward in the notorious "40-and-8's" to their respective rear-echelon bases, the towns of Sens, Auxerre, and Joigny. In Joigny a second parachute battalion joined Division Artillery—the 460th Parachute F. A., an older battalion which had finished its

Problem

Fort Benning-Camp Mackall history when the 13th Airborne was still young, and had since made a distinguished record fighting in Italy, Southern France, and in the Battle of the Bulge.

In late March, 1945, Division Artillery — and all of the Division—began elaborate preparations for an operation that might well have made history, but a few days before the operation was to begin the Third Army crossed the Rhine River unaided, at the point where the Division was to have spear-headed the crossing, and History at this time passed the 13th Airborne by. Shortly thereafter, in the uncertain category of Theater Reserve, the Division moved to Airborne marshalling areas scattered throughout Northern France.

At the marshalling areas there were some rather tense days during a time when missions for the Division were often planned and always abandoned. A proposed landing south of Stuttgart, Germany, came nearer to being realized than any of the several projected combat missions for which the Division prepared. The men drew their ammunition and sharpened their knives, but two days before the scheduled take-off, they learned that this was another instance where someone else had got there first—this time the American 7th and French 1st Armies. Except for days like these, however, life in the marshalling areas was serene and uneventful. Even victory in Europe did not seem the great event that it was, since the newspapers and radio had gradually led all to expect it. It was, however, a warning bell for preparations to move again—back to the base camps.

In the latter part of July the men of Div Arty were notified of another movement soon to come. Shortly afterward, it became known that the Division was being redeployed to the Pacific through the United States. First, there was Camp Pittsburgh, the Assembly Area, then Camp Philip Morris, the Staging Area, and at last the "Thomas H. Barry," the best for home. At sea, three days cut of Le Havre, the momentarily expected surrender of Japan was announced. The ship was crowded, rain drizzled outside, and the troop compartments were hot, but everyone was happy. Furloughs were expected, and, best of all, the men of Division Artillery were going home. Truly, the war was over.

At one period during the furloughs there arose a possibility of Pacific occupation, but the threat was over with the uneventful and successful American control of Japan, and in October most of the men of the 13th Airborne reassembled at Fort Bragg, some few having been released immediately. At Fort Bragg, Division Artillery still exists and will continue to exist, but for those men who have been in it during the past two years it will shortly become history. In the years to come pleasant memories will become more vivid, and those less pleasant will be forgotten. Men will remember the history of a team—a good team—and be proud.

CAPT. RALPH R. DARNELL
Battery Commander

HISTORY OF 13th ABN DIVISION ARTILLERY

NOT of Division Artillery Headquarters, not of a battalion. You give your address, and people think you've omitted something because your address is only that of a battery. That's the way it is for members of "the battery," Division Artillery Headquarters Battery, the small group of men whose job is that of integrating and unifying the whole of Division Artillery—by means of wire and radio communication and by survey. These are the men who work with Artillery weapons the least, and to whom the term "Division Artillery" means perhaps the most.

It was a strangely heterogeneous group of men who made Hq Btry when, with all Division Artillery, the battery began training at Fort Bragg in the fall of 1943—boisterously enthusiastic parachutist potentials, striving to attain the "exalted" status of the paratrooper, and calmer, but proud, new inductees and former ASTP soldiers who were beginning to realize that they were Airborne and glidermen.

In December the jumpers were back from jump school, and battery training began in earnest. Of the Basic and Unit Training — the field work, the calisthenics and double-time, the code practice, the wire laying, and the survey and re-survey of the desolate land that was Camp Mackall — a few experiences stand out, of which the battery is justly proud. These are the Division Artillery field problems — where the battery first saw proof of the importance of its work in Division Artillery — and the excellent battery rating in the July AGF tests. And of these early days the men of the battery like to remember also — the first night problem and the wiremen lost in the woods, a song which began "I'm growing lonely, sad, and blue," the many, many, very deep holes dug in the Fort Bragg bivouac areas, practice AGF tests with the battery commander on leave, pleasant days spent on isolated OP's, old songs sung at night in the field.

At the Parachute School in the summer of '44 most of the battery's glidermen won jumpers' wings, and most of the battery was in the planes on the dark tense night of September 24 for the unprecedented jump which marked the beginning of maneuvers. All the men remember the landings in trees and swamps, the gliders coming in at tree-top level, the monotonous field rations, and the unending hiking — all parts of a job well done and of an experience not to be forgotten.

In October '44 began a period of preparation and waiting. Packing and crating equipment at the Camp Mackall packing sheds, the sixty-day delay in overseas movement, the last holiday passes and furloughs, the expected yet sudden move to Camp Shanks, the New York Port of Embarkation, the boat for France in January. —And amid the hitherto unimagined congestion of the "George Washington" and in the blacked-out blackness of the nights on deck, the men knew that the pass to New York had been the last goodbye to home and that "the ship that is sailing tonight" had sailed—for them.

The pleasant town of Joigny, France, looked fair indeed after the desolation of Le Havre, the chill rain and liquid mud of Camp Lucky Strike, and the long ride by French 40-and-8's to a then unknown destination. The gala first encounter with French wine on the way to Joigny, the waiting to fly over a river the Division was never to cross, the A-48 marshalling area and the second brief anticipation of fighting in the fast-dying war in Europe, the first pass to expensive, uninhibited, beautiful Paris, are all now part of a history that is rapidly ending for the men who made it. —As are the wait for re-deployment, the pleasant evenings in Cezy - Montargis, and along the river and canal in Joigny, the dry-dusty, sunny August days of packing up again at Camp Pittsburgh, and the ride by Continental train to Camp Philip Morris, Le Havre, and the boat for home.

The reassembly of the Division at Fort Bragg in October ended forty-five days of wonderful furlough. Now, where, two years ago, the battery began its existence, the men who remain work and wait. But even when they have gone home to stay they will remember the battery—sleeping on the decks of the “Thomas H. Barry” in drizzling rain, the night at sea when the war was over, the last days with the old friends now discharged, and the sudden end of two years of wondering and waiting together; and they will wonder what Hq Btry will be like in the future when the men who have come to consider themselves “the battery” are all gone.

HISTORY OF 458th PRCHT FA BN

—Compiled by Allen J. McDonald, 1st Lt.

THE original 458th Parachute FA Battalion was activated at Fort Bragg, North Carolina, on February 20, 1943, primarily as a test battalion. Since parachute artillery was then in its infancy, an organization of this type was necessary to determine the dependability and efficiency of new Airborne equipment. At this time the battalion was composed of only two batteries Hq and Sv Battery, and "A" Battery. For a short while these batteries were stationed at Camp Mackall, North Carolina, for training purposes, but in August, 1943, they returned to Fort Bragg. At this time "B," "C," and "D" batteries were activated, and on August 13 the new battalion became the parachute component of the 13th Airborne Division Artillery. The battalion command was assumed by Lt. Col. (then Major) Ralph O. Brown.

The battalion was now composed largely of new inductees, and these began training immediately, men of the original 458th serving as cadre. The men of the battalion will never forget the long runs, the rope-climbing, the deep-knee bends, and the endless push-ups which eventually led them to Fort Benning, Georgia, in November, where they survived well the rigors of Parachute School. The jump school record of the 458 was exceptional—more than 98% of its personnel qualified as parachutists.

Shortly after the return of the battalion to Fort Bragg, the Division moved to Camp Mackall, where Division Artillery completed Basic Training and began more advanced phases of training. In April '44 Airborne Training began, and for the first time the men of the 458th were satisfied with the number of jumps they were able to make. During Airborne Training the batteries entered into a friendly competition to determine which could jump and move its equipment from the field in the shortest time. Although "B" Battery was the winner with the excellent time of eighteen minutes, the slowest battery required only five minutes more. During Airborne Training "A" Battery got the reputation of being the "hard luck" battery. On two occasions accidents occurred which resulted in fatal injuries to its members, once a truck accident while the battery was en route to Pope Field, and again when a plane crashed during its take-off. Sergeant Israel, who was acting as jump master when the crash occurred, was thrown clear. He assisted his men from the plane, which by this time had broken into flames, and distinguished himself in a manner for which he was later awarded the Soldier's Medal.

Upon completion of Airborne Training, the 458th continued its work and made consistently high scores on its Army Ground Forces Tests. After this the battalion participated in the two-week Division maneuvers which began on September 24. On maneuvers too, it seemed that "A" Battery was not able to shake its jinx; again, one of its planes crashed, with much more tragic results than before. But even under adverse conditions, the 458th accomplished what was generally recognized to be very excellent work. It made high scores on all phases of the maneuvers and received a commendation from the inspecting team. The battalion spent the remainder of the year training with its Combat Team infantry component, the 515th Parachute Regiment—in night and day operations, jumps, and acquainting the infantry with forward-observer techniques.

From January 1, 1945, until the movement to the Port of Embarkation at Camp Shanks, New York, on January 16, the battalion was busy. Several packing teams worked in shifts, crating equipment twenty-four hours a day, in order to meet the deadline for movement. Everyone was almost happy to leave Camp Mackall and the ever-present threat of having to unpack the laboriously packed equipment. The men spent five days in being processed at Camp Shanks, but also managed a final "stateside fling" on a twelve-hour pass into New York City. The battalion took its last long look at the States on the afternoon of January 25, just before embarking, for no one was allowed "topside" when the "Marine Robin" sailed early the next morning.

There was much confusion before the men were settled down in their strange-four-decker bunks—and no sooner had the situation taken on some appearance of order than it became disorderly with the many cases of seasickness. Westerners contended that no horse ever bucked as much or as badly as the "Marine Robin," and Easterners said they used to think subways were crowded, but no more. Throughout the voyage the men thought largely of food. Facilities aboard ship made impossible the serving of more than two meals a day, and these were far from excellent. For those who were seasick, digestion, too, was a problem. But, on the brighter side, there were movies every other night, P-X rations were ample, and card games were numerous. There was a dense fog over the English Channel as the ship neared Europe, and, rather than heading directly for France, the "Marine Robin" put in at Southampton, England, until the fog lifted. This was the first, and for many the only, glimpse of England. The next evening, the ship put out to sea again and reached Le Havre, France, the following morning.

The battalion debarked at Le Havre in the early morning of February 9, and proceeded immediately by motor convoy to Camp Lucky Strike, near the towns of Cany-Barville and St. Valery-en Caux. The Army called Camp Lucky Strike a staging area, but everyone else called it a lake. There the 458th had its first experience with the much-publicized French rain and the resulting mud. But, aided by many bales of hay and many helmets full of gravel, the average person did not sink far above his boot-tops. The unit remained at Camp Lucky Strike for eight days, and then proceeded in the infamous French "forty-and-eights" to its garrison base at Auxerre, France.

At Auxerre, the battalion was quartered in a caserne formerly occupied by German troops. It was evident that the Germans had observed few rules of sanitation, and it took almost a week to get the quarters clean enough to meet the standards of the U. S. Army. At Auxerre training was resumed, the main emphasis being placed on training with the infantry. Small arms and artillery ranges were established, and for a while activities were little different from what they had been in the States. On March 7 the battalion was reorganized, and personnel of "D" Battery were absorbed throughout Division Artillery.

The 458th was alerted once to move to a marshalling area, but the movement was canceled. Shortly after this, it did move to such an area at Airfield B-92, a few miles northeast of Abbeville, arriving there on April 4. Once the battalion was settled in the marshalling area, life became easy. Activities consisted mostly of routine training and athletics, but there were a few anxious days during which the Division was on the alert for a possible combat jump into Germany. It was at B-92 that the men of the 458th had their first passes to Paris, Lille, and other cities of northern France, and there was one excursion made to examine beach defenses constructed by the Germans at St. Valerie-sur-Somme.

Shortly before VE Day, Col. Brown was transferred to Division Artillery Headquarters, and Lt. Col. (then Major) George Metcalf took command. Although the loss of Col. Brown was felt keenly throughout the organization, the battalion quickly gave its support and cooperation to Col. Metcalf. On May 13, after forty days in the marshalling area, the 458th moved back to Auxerre, only to move again within a few days—this time to Chateau Guillebauden, a few miles from Auxerre. A short time after the arrival of the battalion, Camp Maple—as the area near the Chateau was called—had many of the comforts and refinements of home. Although all personnel and installations, with the exception of the Command Post, were housed in tents, living quarters and kitchens had wooden floors. A lake was cleaned up for swimming, showers were set up, and mess tables were provided. There was a battalion track and field arena, and each battery had its own athletic grounds. Athletics were an important part of the activities at Camp Maple. There were 458th men on the track team which won the Division championship for Division Artillery, the softball team, though it lost the Division title to the 326th Glider Infantry, won the Auxerre League championship, the volley ball team was undefeated, and the officers' softball team ranked high in Div Arty.

Redeployment orders came through in late July, and on July 28 the 458th left Camp Maple for Camp Pittsburgh, the Assembly Area. Here the battalion completed processing and packing for its journey to the Pacific, by way of the United States. From Camp Pittsburgh, the 458th moved on to Camp Philip Morris, a few miles from Le Havre. There customs inspections were made, money converted, and last details arranged.

It was a great day when the battalion boarded the "Thomas H. Barry" on August 12, for the voyage home. Living conditions and food were better on this trip than they had been on the journey to Europe, but the men were on their way home, and conditions aboard ship made little difference. Any discomfort was further offset by the announcement of the end of the war. The ship arrived in New York on August 20, and the battalion debarked and boarded trains for Camp Kilmer, New Jersey.

The prospect of a long furlough was a happy one, and the men began thinking of the time when they would say goodbye to the Army and go home to stay. But there was a bit of sadness, too, for they knew that, though there would be further duty with the Army and with the 458th for most of them, the war was over, and the battalion as they had known it would not last much longer. A new 458th would exist without them, and the old battalion would become just a memory and a part of history.

677th GLIDER FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

Other Battalion Commanders
MAJ. RICHARD T. BOWIE
Who assumed Command—Oct. 17, 1945

IN the early summer of 1943, when the 9th Division Area at Fort Bragg began to be a center of preparatory activity for the creation of the new 13th Airborne Division, a small group of 78th Division artillerymen arrived there to find that they were to be the enlisted nucleus of a new artillery battalion, a glider-riding battalion which would take its place as an integral part of the Division Artillery of the new parachute-glider division. Officers were there too—officers prepared in cadre schools for the job of creating and training a new artillery unit—and these officers and men, on the 13th of August, Activation Day for the new division, became the 677th Glider Field Artillery Battalion, under the command of Lt. Col. Howell B. Long.

In September more men began to arrive—inductees fresh from Reception Centers, men from the Fort Benning Parachute School, and men from the 72nd Replacement Battalion at Fort Bragg. These filled out the 677th—a new outfit of trained men and untrained men of mature soldiers and cocky kids, of men who knew the Army and men still somewhat in awe of it. The new battalion was Airborne, but the men at this time knew little of Airborne soldiering; and they had first to learn to be artillerymen. On November 8, battalion training began. It was the old Basic routine, for seventeen weeks without a let-up, but it made trained howitzer men, wire men, radio men, and survey men of inexperienced rookies. These men learned also that a glider battalion has to walk, and sometimes run, as well as to ride gliders. There were long days of dry-firing on the rifle range, and finally the fun of actually shooting at targets and hitting them. There were several weeks when some men saw Airborne activity at first-hand while they worked with the 10th Airborne Division on its Carolina maneuvers. There was the move to Camp Mackall in January '44 and the problem of getting used to a place so dreary and forbidding at first sight. At Mackall, too, there was combat team training with the 88th Glider Infantry, which provided a different sort of field experience from that gained by working as a battalion alone, or as a part of Division Artillery. And throughout Basic and the further training that followed, there were the inevitable incidents that make Army life a little pleasanter—Sgt. Corbett swallowing his chewing tobacco on the obstacle course, Lt. Mason's always unsuccessful experiments with booby traps or with floating jeeps across rivers, and the skunk in bed with Sgt. Watt one night in the field.

In April artillery training was interrupted for four weeks while the men took the Airborne training that made them truly glidermen. One sergeant thought, no doubt, that loading and lashing enthusiasm had been carried too far when he found himself in his battery street early one morning, lashed to his bed with the best of Baker bowlines. Airborne training made the men glider-conscious, and they began to wonder more about the always-rumored, never-materializing glider pay. Then Airborne work gave way to further artillery training, and in July the 677th made a very high score on its Army Ground Force Tests.

The often-talked-of glider pay became a fact in August, and the standard of living in the 677th rose considerably as a result, but by this time many battalion men were already on parachute pay, these men having completed the jumper's course at Fort Benning in August, while the glider components of Division Artillery were stationed at the Parachute School for the purpose of training new jumpers. The jumping glidermen won't forget the Parachute School, with its disconcerting array of training gadgetry — the towers, the landing trainer, and the "trainasium," and its sweat sheds — where a scratchy phonograph record of Sinatra's "I Couldn't Sleep a Wink Last Night" was supposed to ease the tension of waiting one's turn to take off for a jump. And they all remember the fellow who suggested to several officers that they find the hundred dollar door of the C-47 they were jumping from.

Maneuvers began from Lumberton Airport on September 24, after the battalion had spent three days in bivouac there. Most 677th men entered the maneuver by glider on the morning of the 25th, but a contingent of battalion men hit the silk—and a moment later the swamps—with the rest of the Division Artillery parachutist elements on the night of the 24th. A few hours later, though, the men were out of the creeks and underbrush and well-prepared to receive the rest of the battalion when it arrived.

On January 4, 1945, the 677th—with the rest of the Division—was alerted for overseas movement and after a two-week period of preparation which must have come near the record for Army speed in getting things done, the battalion was in the staging area at cold, snowy, Camp Shanks, New York, on the 19th. On the 26th, after five days of shots and equipment checks, and one pass to New York, the men loaded themselves onto the "George Washington" and the next morning sailed for France—with memories of Camp Mackall, which seemed not such a bad place now, of New York and a place called "The Tango Palace," and of home filling their minds as they wondered what their destination and mission would be. The trip over has now become a memory of morning inspection in compartments so crowded that both officers and enlisted men could scarcely move, of KP in the ship's kitchen, of non-cleansing saltwater showers, dice games, and an over-abundance of Tootsie Rolls.

For the sea-weary and seasick artillerymen the sight of the coast of England on February 6th was a memorable one, and even the cold, dreary desolation of Le Havre, France, where the battalion debarked on February 7, they found preferable to the watery monotony of the turbulent Atlantic. Camp Lucky Strike, to which the battalion moved by truck from Le Havre, was a dismal, rainy place, where meals for the first several days were less than adequate and a stove in one's tent was a rare blessing. After ten days there, the 677th proceeded by forty-and eight to Joigny, France, and the caserne there where the battalion was to be quartered. The trip by rail had been a lively one, especially so because of casks of red wine encountered in the Paris rail yards.

The men of the 677th remember a pleasant life of extended duration at Joigny. Upon arriving there the battalion was armed with 105mm howitzers, which replaced its former 75mm Airborne howitzers, and became a heavier artillery battalion for general support of the combat teams of the Division. No longer a combat team component, the 677th did not move hither and yonder with the rest of Division Artillery as the Division prepared itself for proposed Airborne missions. The mission of the 677th was to remain at its base and to be ready to move out if proposed missions actually materialized. Thus, the battalion remained at Joigny during the Rhineland operation alert, when other units prepared to move out, and during the six weeks or so when the other artillery battalions were in marshalling areas waiting for a series of missions which never got beyond the preparatory stage. During the earlier days of alerts and cancellations of alerts, there was a great deal of work to be done, and social life of the battalion was necessarily limited. But even then there were the weekly dances at L'Ecole Maternelle and the agreeable mademoiselles who never could quite learn to jitterbug. As time went by there were passes to Montargis, Fontainebleau, and Paris. Few men will forget their visits to these towns—especially to Paris, with its beautiful and historic buildings, its unusual Rue Pigalle, and its shapely and charming women. But life at Joigny was not all passes and social events. The 677th engaged in constant artillery practice on the “ranges” near Joigny—“ranges” which were actually the fields of French farmers who could not always understand why the American soldiers should be shelling their crops, but who were, nevertheless, usually generous with their vin rouge, eau de vie, and cognac.

In late July the men of the battalion learned that the 13th Airborne Division was to be redeployed to the Pacific by way of the United States. The eager battalion was quickly ready to move out, and—with the rest of Division Artillery—proceeded by truck to Camp Pittsburgh near Reims within a week after redeployment was first announced. After twelve days of final preparations at Camp Pittsburgh, the 677th moved by train to Camp Philip Morris near Le Havre, and after two days there boarded the “Thomas H. Barry” at Le Havre for the trip to the U. S. The second day at sea the “Thomas H. Barry” ran into bad weather which lasted for three days. Men slept on the decks of the double-loaded ship, and consoled their seasick bodies with happy thoughts of days ahead at home. The end of the war, which came while the ship was at sea, further raised the morale of the already happy men. On August 20 the 677th saw Staten Island and New York City again. Debarking, the speedy train ride to Camp Kilmer, the truly royal Army welcome, with steak, the first sundaes and milk shakes at the P-X's—two days of this passed quickly, and the men were on their way to their Reception Stations, and from there, home.

Shortly after the reassembly of the battalion at Fort Bragg in October, Col. Long, battalion commander since activation, left the 677th to return to civilian life. Many old battalion men had already been discharged, having remained at their Reception Stations for that purpose when they returned from their furloughs. All men of the 677th fully understood and shared Marcucci's feeling that things would be pretty dull with the Colonel gone, for the departure of Col. Long was symbolic of the end of the history of the 677th which they had been part of. Now most men of the original battalion are awaiting their turn to become civilians again. Some may re-enlist, but generally old faces are now making way for new ones, and the 677th is changing. But those who remain and those who are gone have memories that the new men can be proud of, even though they cannot share them. For the 677th has come a long way since 1943, when a gliderman was just a fellow who wore leggings and for $50.00 a month rode a "flying matchbox."

460th PARACHUTE FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

Former Battalion Commander

LT. COL. JAMES B. ANDERSON—April 15, 43—April 15, 44

THE 460th Parachute Field Artillery Battalion was activated April 15, 1943, under the command of Lt. Col. James B. Anderson. During the months of April, May, June, July, and August, the battalion assumed shape at Camp Toccoa, Georgia. Rigorous exercises and never-to-be-forgotten runs up Mt. Currahee in the heat at Toccoa, weeded out those physically unfit and left a unit of young, eager men, rarin' to go. Early in August 1943 the 460th became a part of the 17th Airborne Division at Camp Mackall, North Carolina. Here the battalion had its first artillery training, along with the never-ending physical program. Transferring to Fort Benning, Georgia, the 460th won its boots and wings September 18. Richard Daley of Baker Battery won the distinctive award of a pair of golden wings, his third jump being the 200,000th to be made at Fort Benning.

The battalion returned to Mackall and stayed there from September 20 to January 24, 1944, when the men left their warm barracks for maneuvers in Tennessee. Working with its combat team infantry component, the battalion battled the 26th, 78th, and 106th Infantry Divisions. On a sixty-four-mile forced march, the combat team walked through the entire area of the 26th and "annihilated" the "Yankee Division." In Tennessee "General Mud" took a hand in the command and made it necessary for the men to improvise many methods of keeping themselves and their equipment dry—all of them unsuccessful. An important contributing factor to the victory in the "Battle of Mud" in Tennessee was the ice cream and candy sold by civilians at the end of each problem.

Maneuvers came to an end when it was learned that the 517th Combat Team was to leave the 17th Airborne Division. The ride back to Camp Mackall was something out of this world—each officer and enlisted man had a private bunk and, what was more, breakfast in bed! Back at Mackall, showdown after showdown started rumors a-flying of overseas shipment. A new battalion commander, West Pointer Lt. Col. Raymond L. Cato, arrived, and when packing and waterproofing of equipment began, everyone felt sure he would be in action before long. On the 6th of May, the last short furloughs over, the last equipment packed, the 460th entrained for Camp Patrick Henry, Virginia, where there were last showdowns and "shots" before the battalion sailed on May 17 from Hampton Roads.

Aboard the U. S. S. "Cristobal" there was a rumor that nine nurses were aboard, but the ladies were never found. To add insult to injury, Wacs could be seen standing at the rail of the nearby "Santa Rosa," which carried the 517th Parachute Infantry. The "Cristobal" docked at Naples, Italy, the 31st of May, and there the men learned that the combat team was scheduled to go into action June 1st on a road leading to Rome. But its supply ship had not arrived, and the battalion bivouacked at "The Crater," just outside of Naples. During a two-week stay, the troopers visited Naples, and found it bombed, crumbling, and dirty—vastly different from American cities.

Leaving Naples, the 460th, now attached to the 36th Infantry Division, boarded an LST and headed north for Civitavecchia. It was near Civitavecchia that two S-2 officers, Lt. Biddle of the 460th and Capt. Deering of the 517th, who were scouting the area around Grosseto, found themselves in the undefended village of Montalto di Castro—a town which they were later credited with capturing! And near this town, on the morning of June 17, exactly one month after sailing from Hampton Roads, the men of the 460th were initiated into combat. During their twelve days of supporting the 36th Infantry, they gave the Germans no rest and had little themselves. They dug in and fired, moved and repeated the process, for seemingly endless days until the enemy had been pushed up the west coast of Italy to Follonica. Then, its mission completed, the combat team was relieved, and the men loaded on trucks for Fraschti. In the few days since Montalto di Castro the 'troopers had changed; the bond of comradeship had grown stronger; confidence had replaced cockiness.

On the way back rumors about the next mission ran wild, but at their new station, high in the mountains overlooking Rome, the men of the 460th forgot about the future. There were passes to Rome—sight-seeing tours taking in the Coliseum, St. Peter's Cathedral, and the Pantheon. A former Fascist's mansion became an NCO Club. There were coffee and doughnuts at the Red Cross, with real American girls behind the counters. Internationally-minded 'troopers set about strengthening Italiano-American relations. A few phrases of Italian, a bit of chocolate, and a fellow had a girl on his arm. Officers found night life and entertainment at Broadway Bill's or the Excelsior Hotel. But life at Fraschti was not easy. Passes came only after days of hard work—physical training and runs up the mountain sides—and Mount Currahee in Georgia, was a mere mound compared to Italian mountains. In the afternoons there were road marches and swimming in beautiful Lake Albano. The battalion was shaping up into an outfit of hardened, sun-tanned men.

Then the 460th became a part of the First Airborne Task Force, under the command of Major General Robert T. Fredericks. Remaining non-jumpers were qualified at the Airborne Training Center south of Rome. Rumors of a coming combat jump held high priority in nightly bull-sessions. On the twelfth of August, the battalion, less C Battery, which was to work with the first battalion, 517th Parachute Infantry, proceeded by truck to Montalto Air Field on the outskirts of Montalto di Castro, the town captured a few weeks earlier by Lt. Biddle and Capt. Deering. The 460th spent two days at Montalto. Bundles were loaded on planes, dropping mechanisms were tested, officers were briefed by the Air Corps, and everyone was briefed at sand tables.

On the night of August 14th, forty-five planes, carrying the men of the 460th, took off from Montalto Air Field and headed for the French coast. The battalion had had its initiation into combat in Italy, but this was its first Airborne mission. Men slept as they winged toward France. As land came into view, they woke each other up, and made last-minute checks of equipment. They stood up, bracing themselves as the plane lurched. There was a silent prayer on each man's lips as he shuffled toward the door. Two thousand feet below, obscured by the murky fog was the enemy. As they had many times before, men wondered why they had ever joined such a crazy outfit. Minutes ticked by

GO!!!

Down, down, down—suddenly a body-tearing yank, a grateful look at that beautiful canopy billowing overhead, and another prayer. . . .

The parachute force was split into three main groups in the landing. One group, "Task Force Frank," jumped prematurely, five minutes after sighting the coast of France. These fifty or sixty men from Able, Baker, and Dog Batteries organized themselves as a small combat team, under Major Edward C. Frank, Jr. Taking advantage of the confused Germans, who thought them a much larger force, they neutralized an 88 position and routed what they later learned to have been approximately a battalion of the enemy, as they fought their way toward the 460th Assembly Area. In the vicinity of Trans-en-Provence, about forty men, assembled under the command of Capt. Louis J. Vogel, were able to walk through a German position undetected, so great was the confusion of the enemy. About three-quarters of the battalion landed on the DZ, but in small, scattered groups. One group under Col. Cato acted as an assault squad to neutralize enemy positions, and all groups had to fight their way to the assembly point, but by six o'clock in the morning approximately one-third of the battalion had assembled, and six howitzers were in their predesignated positions, to form the first battery.

A skeleton Command Post was set up in the Chateau St. Rosalina, outside La Motte, liaison officers and their sections reached their respective infantry battalions and set up radio communication between units of the combat team. The battalion could now fire upon call. By noon, eleven howitzers were in position with Fire Direction

Center ready to control their fire. The landing of the 602nd Glider F. A. shortly afterward provided the infantry with two battalions of artillery for support. Order was replacing confusion. By early evening radio contact had been established with the 45th and 36th Infantry Divisions, with Capt. Vogel's force near Trans-en-Provence, with VI Corps, and with 1st Abn Task Force. Firing was continuous during the night and the next day. At six o'clock in the evening of the 15th "Task Force Frank" joined the rest of the battalion. The initial part of the mission was accomplished, and the 460th remained in bivouac near La Motte until August 18th, when the combat team moved out toward Puget.

The convoy to Puget that afternoon looked more like a gypsy caravan than anything military—there was a thirty-passenger bus, several motorcycles, two Buick pick-ups, an Italian truck, and a French truck driven by its owner. Behind these came the hiking artillerymen. At Puget the expected attack by the Germans never materialized, and the battalion continued to move along the French Riviera toward the Italian border. From Puget to St. Pauls, from St. Pauls to St. Cezaire, from St. Cezaire to St. Vallier, the Krauts were in full retreat, and the combat team encountered only small units fighting a delaying action.

Weary warriors had a four-day rest in the taverns and bars of the pleasant city of Grasse, famous for its perfume. Then a thirty-five miles march over hills and mountains brought the battalion to Bouyon, where, in support of the 517th, it blasted the Germans across the Var River. On the other side of the Var, where the battalion fired a few missions, the men saw an example of a German anti-Airborne defense that they, luckily, had not encountered—a network of poles and low-stretched wires, with artillery shells attached. From September 4 to September 6, from a position near L'Escarene, the 460th supported the 517th as it drove the enemy from the surrounding mountains. Heavy counter-battery fire to which the battalion was subjected and a direct hit upon an Able Battery position made severe demands upon the coolness and courage of the over-worked medics, and forced the battalion CP to evacuate a railroad station in favor of a nearby tunnel.

On September 6 the Germans withdrew to the fortifications of the Sospel Valley. The battalion CP was moved from the tunnel to the town of Luceram, and the batteries dug in at strategic positions overlooking the valley. For a long time Able Battery, at Piera Cava, and Dog Battery, on a cliff overlooking the valley, were "the front," with no infantry between them and the enemy three-quarters of a mile away. The combat team was in essentially a defensive position, but aggressive infantry patrol activity and incessant, highly accurate shelling and machine-gunning from the 460th made the Sospel Valley and Mt. Agaïzien on its opposite side untenable for the enemy. On October 28th the Germans blew three bridges, and withdrew under cover of darkness. Moving forward in support of the 517th, the 460th dug into positions in the vicinity of Mt. Agaïzien, overlooking the towns of Briel and Olivetto San Michelle. The battalion established itself as comfortably as possible in the available buildings, and fired with continuous and deadly accuracy on German supply lines until it was relieved by a battalion of Armored Infantry on November 16. Then, a three-day hike brought the men to a bivouac area near La Colle-sur-Loup, for their first rest in ninety-seven days.

It had been a long time since that night at Montalto Air Field. The combat team had touched off the Invasion Day TNT and had blasted the Germans from the 'chute-strewn field at La Motte through the Sospel Valley. It had been a lonesome, forgotten war of their own—that "Champagne Campaign"—long, hard days of combat, precious passes to beautiful Nice, abruptly-ended romances with Riviera belles, and for some the military cemetery at Draguignan.

After eighteen days of training emphasizing lessons learned in combat, and—during off-duty hours—movies, sports, passes to Nice, and walks in the picturesque countryside, at La Colle-sur-Loup, the battalion piled into forty-and-eights at Antibes, and for three days journeyed northward in weather which grew increasingly colder. Upon arrival at its destination—cold, dreary, wet Soissons—the 460th was attached to XVIII Airborne Corps.

December 16th "it" happened. Under Von Runstedt the Germans broke through in Belgium and threatened to split the American Armies. In response to a call from Corps Headquarters, the 460th entrucked on the 22nd of December for Werbomont, Belgium. There, at Corps Headquarters, Col. Cato and his staff learned that somewhere, not far away, in southern Belgium, the 101st Airborne Division, the 106th Infantry Division, and many other units had been cut off by the German advance from the rest of the Allied Forces.

The 460th moved to Xhoffraix, Belgium, to supplement the artillery of the 30th Infantry Division. There the men ate their Christmas dinner — D-rations. There was heavy German air activity, but worse than the battle was the cold — the bitter, numbing cold that penetrated layers of clothing and froze feet and hands. Men suffered indescribably during those days of "the Bulge." The day after Christmas, the Combat Team moved to Ferriers to prevent a break-through in that sector; on December 27 to Au Haute in support of the 7th Armored Division's drive on Manhay. On New Year's Day there was a real turkey dinner, which made up somewhat for the Christmas D-rations. From position to position on the northern flank of the Bulge, in attacks on Manhay, Trois Pont, Bergeval, St. Jacques, Henumont, Coules, Logbeirne, Mont de Fosse, and Petit Thier, in support of the 30th, 75th, 106th, and 1st Infantry Divisions, of the 7th Armored Division, and of the 82nd Airborne Division, the 460th relentlessly pounded enemy-held territory until January 23 when the battalion was relieved for a rest at Stavelot, Belgium.

At Stavelot there were gun drill and classes, six-day furloughs to Paris for a lucky few, movies at night, and one real shower. Then on February 2, the combat team moved to Losheimergraben, Germany, in preparation for an assault on the vaunted Siegfried Line. Here artillery fire was directed at troop movements; the concrete emplacements of the Line were invulnerable to seventy-five millimeter shelling. After nearly three weeks of operations in the deepest mud the 460th had encountered, the combat team was again relieved on February 20 and started moving back to France for a well-earned rest.

Upon arriving at Joigny, France, the 460th was assigned to the 13th Airborne Division. Although it was not known at the time, the combat team had seen its last action. In March there was an alert for the jump across the Rhine; at Vitry, April 3rd, the battalion again made preparations for jumping, but as each day went by, it became evident that it was not needed. On May 8, 1945, the 460th paused for a brief celebration of victory in Europe. However, with the war still on in the Pacific, V-E Day meant little more than transfer to another theater. This was borne out by the announcement at Joigny in July that the 13th Airborne was scheduled for redeployment to the Pacific with a short stopover in the States for furloughs. At sea, two days out of Le Havre, the announcement of V-J Day came over the ship's radio. Men who had been looking forward to a furlough realized that a discharge was not too far in the future. In the States at last on August 20, the men of the 460th were at home shortly afterward.

Over a year had passed since they had sailed from Hampton Roads—months of hard combat in far places. Perhaps some men sweated a little the thought of Pacific occupation with the 13th Airborne, but soon Japan had been peacefully occupied, and for the men of the old 460th duty with the Army was over a few weeks after the furloughs ended. It's another 460th in garrison at Fort Bragg now, a new battalion which will always be proud of the record made by the men of the "Champagne Campaign" and the Battle of the Bulge.

676th GLIDER FIELD ARTILLERY BATTALION

ON the 13th of August, 1943, the 676th Glider FA Battalion, under the command of Lt. Col. Clark Lynn, Jr., was activated at Fort Bragg as a part of the new 13th Airborne Division. However, the battalion had its beginnings before that date and did not really become the organization its members now know until some time after it. The 676th began with cadre officers, trained in the New Division Officers' School at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, as early as June 1943, and with men from the 78th Division, who arrived at Fort Bragg in July to take over their jobs as the enlisted cadre of a still-to-be-activated outfit. The battalion grew in size and personality throughout the late summer and fall of 1943. Young inductees from the New England States and former ASTP men who had some from everywhere by way of the 72nd Replacement Battalion at Fort Bragg continued to arrive until November, at which time the 676th had reached full strength and Lt. Col. Henry L. T. Koren assumed the battalion command. At this time, also, Basic Training began, and the 676th that all battalion men will remember really began to exist and to function.

As it does to all new Airborne Artillery outfits, Basic Training to the men of the 676th meant hikes and calisthenics, wire laying and survey, occupying and evacuating positions at night, digging holes and filling them up. And in the middle of it all came a move from Fort Bragg to the considerably more primitive post of Camp Mackall, North Carolina. The newly-graduated artillerymen were relieved and happy the Saturday in February, 1944, when Basic ended, but the following Monday and all the days that came after it were no more leisurely than the days that had gone before. Combat swimming, more and bigger field problems as combat team artillery with the 326th Glider Infantry, glider loading and lashing—this was called Unit Training. In April for the first time the men who had vowed they'd never be seen in a "flying cheese box" and the men who had looked forward to Airborne Training as something new and different saw the tobacco fields and pine trees of North Carolina from above—through the window of a CG-4A.

In midsummer of 1944 many of the men of the 676th became acquainted with the distinctively Airborne organization that is the Fort Benning Parachute School, a strange little world of high towers, silken parachutes, and frightening airplanes. More than sixty per cent of the battalion's personnel became parachutists there. At this time many other 676th men were at Camp Howze, Texas, giving glider training to the 103rd Division. But in September the battalion was together again, and with the rest of the Division, the men of the 676th made the Airborne landings on the night of the 24th and the morning of the 25th which opened Division maneuvers — parachute landings into the swampland around Camp Mackall at night, and glider landings in the maneuver drop zone in the morning. Despite a beginning that resembled chaos, the battalion proved more than equal to the test of maneuvers, as it did to all tests that followed, and in November the 676th—with a uniformly excellent record behind it, and a very high score on its Army Ground Forces Tests — was ready for overseas movement.

In January '45 the battalion left the sand of Camp Mackall for the snow of Camp Shanks, New York, and after five days of processing, packing, and shots, left there to board the U. S. S. "General George O. Squier" for a trip across the Atlantic. The 676th was "mess battalion" on the boat; or, in plainer language, battalion men did KP for the troops aboard. After a few days everyone was sick of food and sick without it, but the 676th-operated kitchen continued to serve nine thousand meals daily. At last, on February 7, the battalion arrived and debarked at Le Havre, France. The 676th loaded on the well-known forty-and-eights at Le Havre, and, eighteen hours later, reached Camp Lucky Strike, forty-five miles away.

The name of Camp Lucky Strike certainly was not a descriptive one. Here the men of the 676th walked in knee-level mud, encountered chow lines half a mile long, and shivered in pyramidal tents which they tried to keep warm on their meager fuel ration. For nearly two weeks the battalion improved Camp Lucky Strike—carried rocks and stones, built walkways, set up its own kitchen, and tried to make the place livable. Then, as the mud began to dry, the weather to grow warmer, and the food to become more plentiful and better, the 676th moved out—to Sens, France, which was to be its base camp for the duration of its stay in that country.

The life at Sens was one of tension and training until late March when the long-awaited alert to fly over the Rhine River came. Then the cancellation of the alert relieved the tension and halted the intensive moving-out preparation until the end of the month, when the battalion moved to an Airborne marshalling area near Chateaudun, France. Other alerts came and were cancelled, and on V-E Day the 676th, a battalion untried in combat, was still waiting at the marshalling area for a war that had passed it by. Toward and after the end of the war the 676th became a battalion of tourists and athletes. From the marshalling area the men visited Chartres, Tours, Orleans, Loches, and Paris. Back at Sens they continued to visit places of interest in France, and a few made trips to England. During this time, in addition to ordinary garrison duty and training, the men of the battalion took part in extensive athletic activities. There were field days in which the 676th competed against the 460th, the 677th, and 326th Glider Infantry. The battalion defeated the 460th and 677th, and made a creditable showing against the 326th. Captain Thompson's track team played an outstanding part in the field day successes of the battalion.

During the months of waiting in France the 676th offered parachutist training to its men who were not already qualified as jumpers, and as a result of this training and additional fifteen per cent of the battalion became parachutists. There were no Fort Benning facilities in France, and, after a few days of mock door work and fall training, the potential jumpers cleared the doors of real, flying, C-47's for their qualification jumps. Most of the men qualified, and just before V-E Day, the 676th made a battalion jump, in which the glidermen proved their versatility by successfully carrying out their first practice parachute mission.

The history of the 676th after July 1945 can be told briefly. With the Division alert for redeployment, the battalion left Sens, packed equipment and was processed at Camp Pittsburgh; traveled by train to Camp Philip Morris, and at Le Havre boarded the "Thomas H. Barry" for the voyage to New York. A medium-sized ship carrying 4,500 men was not the pleasantest conveyance on which to cross the ocean, but when men are headed home and a war is over, the matter of personnel comfort is a small one. For the 676th, as for all returning units, the sight of the USA on August 20 was the pleasantest one in many months. The gala welcoming ship in New York harbor, with its big 13th Airborne banner, the hospitable Army personnel at Camp Kilmer, the quick and efficient processing which hurried the men home within a few days after they had reached New York—such things as these caused everyone to forget past grievances and inconveniences, and to feel kindly even toward the Army.

It is only fitting that the 676th has reassembled at Fort Bragg, where it started out two years ago. Now the "old men" of the 1943 battalion have returned to civilian life, and the recruits of two years ago have become "old men." Now the "recruits" of 1945 are arriving, and the 676th is beginning its history all over again. Before very long the last men of the original battalion will be gone, and the two years past of working, hoping, and waiting will take their place in the history of an outfit whose existence will not end with them, but will go on. But the memories of those years—they will belong to the men who made them when the battalion was young, and these men will, in a way, always belong to the 676th.

ATHLETICS

INASMUCH as athletics are an integral part of life and spirit in the Army and bear especial importance in this Division, a separate book is therefore devoted to it.

The interdivision athletic program is, of course, of greatest significant in this field. Division teams represented us in baseball, basketball, boxing, swimming and golf. We have met and defeated outstanding teams in America and Europe.

Another vital part of athletics in the Division is our intramural program. Since the activities included in this program are so varied, every officer and soldier of the Division is encouraged to participate, competitively, in those sports in which he is most interested.

Taken as a whole, then, athletics occupy a significant place in the life and spirit of the Division. This section records some of the highlights in this field.

PERSONALITIES, DANCES,

THE prime purpose of a history is to record the people, the events, and the spirit of the years through which the Division existed. It is quite important, then, that a portion of the book be devoted to that purpose. This book is appropriately entitled FEATURES — in it we give you various glimpses by words and pictures of “outstanding” events during the years we have spent within the Division.

BEAUTIES

WINNER of the contest to select the "Sweetheart of the 13th Airborne Division" was Mrs. Lois Campbell O'Connor, wife of Private First Class Harold G. O'Connor, 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment. Mrs. O'Connor is a former Staff Sergeant in the United States Women's Marine Corps, having been honorably discharged in November after serving more than three years. Her home is in El Monte, California.

Second place honors in the contest went to Miss Edythe Hylton, Riverside, California, a cousin of Private Duane Hylton, 515th Parachute Infantry Regiment. Forty-five pictures were entered in the contest, which was under the auspices of The Thirteener, the Division's newspaper.

A long line of paratroopers of the 517th Parachute Combat Team was plodding through the snow of Belgium during the Battle of the Bulge when a jeep started to creep past the column. Everybody in the line recognized the big spectacled fellow in the front seat.

"Hey, Dave, I'm hunting for a toothbrush," one trooper called.

"Hi yah, Dave, where's our doughnut girls?"

"I need some chewing tobacco."

Big Dave T. de Varona grinned and waved back but the paratroopers knew that if anybody in the American Army could find that toothbrush, chewing tobacco—or even the doughnut girls—Big Dave could and would.

Big Dave, one-time grid star but now Red Cross Field Director for the 517th Combat Team, was something of a battlefield anomaly. The Army wouldn't take him—so he adopted as much of the Army as he could.
