'Mid the waving rose-trees,
By their breath caressed,
Waits the gard'ner's daughter,
Him she loves the best.
For the sun is sinking
Nightward in the west,
And the bells of even
Call the world to rest.
But, alas! thou waitest
For his step in vain—
For his voice, who never
Seeks thy bower again.
False the love he uttered
To thy trusting ears,
And the vows he made thee,
Now another hears.

CLASS ODE

Words by Lillis J. Phillips

Music by Rudolph C. Ringwall

E'en now the morning and evening
Of our radiant, glad school-days
Are blending into the twilight
That is nearing to part our ways.

But though the twilight deepens
And we far apart may be,
To those care free days we shall journey
Through the paths of memory.

We shall work again with our teachers,
Who are glad our support to be;
We shall play again with our schoolmates,
With hearts that are light and free.

Now another day is dawning
In which we must walk alone;
We must journey forth unaided;
We must roll away each stone.

Though the shades around us deepen,
The shades of our golden youth,
May we all in the new day dawning
Still walk in the paths of truth.

And when the morning and evening
Of the last day blend into night,
May we all once more be united
In the land of e'erlasting light.
