TIME MARCHES ON!

FROM THE PUBLISHERS:

This record depicts, historically, the personnel and some of the training activities of the men of the 102nd Cavalry, U.S.A.

The many and great demands made upon the free time of the personnel, together with attendance at Service Schools away from the post, has made it impossible to show photographs of all of the men. Accordingly, it was necessary to picture those actually available at the time data for this Review were compiled.

THE ESSEX TROOP
120 ROSEVILLE AVENUE
NEWARK, N. J.

March 30, 1942.

GREETINGS are extended to the officers and enlisted men of the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry (H-Recz.)

The New Jersey Cavalry was organized as a Regiment twenty-one years ago, and more than twelve months have elapsed since the 102nd was inducted into Federal service. It is now one of the nationally known and renowned Cavalry units of the Army of the U. S. with a reputation of which every member, past and present, is justly proud. During all these years, the officers and enlisted men have been inspired by the "Cavalry Spirit." They have continued to carry-on the fine traditions of the parent organization, the old "Essex Troop," so that the new will prove themselves worthy of the old.

It was my privilege to join the Essex Troop in 1908 and through all the years of my service, the associations were most pleasant and happy. This applies particularly to the period I served as the Regimental Commander when both officers and enlisted men proved their loyalty and co-operation in the performance of their duties in a willing and efficient manner.

I express herewith to the members of the 102nd Cavalry my sincere appreciation of the service rendered and offer my best wishes for continued success and a glorious future.

COMMANDING GENERAL
NEW JERSEY STATE GUARD
120 ROSEVILLE AVENUE
NEWARK, N. J.

April 9th, 1942.

TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE 102nd ESSEX TROOP CAVALRY:

We are living in a changing world and to some persons and organizations, changes do not always seem desirable. Individuals may often be permitted a choice as to arm.

This freedom of action, however, can not extend to the organization which must cheerfully abide by the decision which the considered judgement of higher authority dictates.

During the interim since World War I, efforts to convert our organization to a different arm have with propriety, been successfully resisted. Changes prescribed as to armament and equipment have always been loyally accepted and never considered within the province of the "Troop" to question.

You have a most illustrious history as horse cavalry, extending over half a century, and I am fully confident that you will serve with like distinction in the future as mechanized cavalry.

Fide et Fortitudine will bring the same inspiration to the mechanized of the future as it has to the horse in the past.

May I express to every member deep appreciation of the splendid manner in which you are carrying on the tradition of Essex Troop.

Faithfully yours,
Lewis B. Ballantyne

To the Officers and Men of the 102nd Cavalry:

The publication of this volume at the end of fourteen months of Federal service, marks the passing of the 102nd Cavalry from its training period to one of active preparation for early combat service.

It is with real pride in the organization and in sincere appreciation of the privilege of commanding this fine regiment that I address these words to you.

This book is a permanent record of your outstanding accomplishments in training. In the years to come, you will prize this volume as you will also recall with pride your own service in the splendid tradition of our Essex Troop.

It will be a lasting memento of those of us who must inevitably fail to return from whatever theater of operations in which we may serve.

Sincerely,

COMMANDING THE 102nd CAVALRY

Colonel McGowan rose through the ranks to take command of the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry after a long military career. He enlisted in Company I of the Fifth New Jersey Infantry, May 15, 1916, and left with that outfit the following month for Mexican border service at Douglas, Arizona. Upon that unit's return to New Jersey, it was mustered out of Federal service in November, 1916, but was again called out for the World War on March 25, 1917.

The Fifth New Jersey became the nucleus of the 114th Infantry, 29th Division, and Colonel McGowan was rapidly promoted through the grades in that outfit, becoming sergeant major of the Second Battalion as the 114th Infantry left for overseas service in France. He was appointed to West Point by competitive examination in November, 1918, by General John J. Pershing, after service in Haute-Alsace and the Meuse-Argonne.

Colonel McGowan resigned from the Military Academy in 1919 and again enlisted in his old outfit, now Company A of the 113th Infantry at Orange, New Jersey. He was commissioned a first lieutenant in June, 1922, and attended the Infantry School at Fort Benning, Georgia, that same year. In 1924, he was promoted to captain and adjutant of the 113th Infantry and was placed on active duty in that assignment in 1926. He became adjutant of the 112th Field Artillery in 1929; he attended the Field Artillery School at Fort Sill, Oklahoma, in 1931, and graduated from the Command and General Staff School in 1935. In 1937 he was appointed Lieutenant Colonel and Deputy Adjutant General of New Jersey, which latter position he still holds.

Promoted to his present rank on January 5, 1941, Colonel McGowan took command of the 102nd as it was inducted into Federal service for the present emergency.

FIRST ARMY MANEUVERS

The 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry moved out of Fort Jackson in the latter part of September, 1941, and established a base camp near Fort Lawn in the northern part of the state. It was from this base that the regiment operated during the initial phases of the First Army maneuvers, which were to continue until the first week in December. While based there, the regiment took part in three corps problems which proved valuable in exercising the command and staff, as well as units in teamwork necessary for the more important army maneuvers and General Headquarters maneuvers which were to climax the Carolina maneuvers.

Operating on a corps front extending from 30 to 50 miles, with horse and mechanized units as combat teams, and screening the advance of the corps as well as executing movements against the "enemy" flanks and rear, the Regiment learned to move rapidly over long distances and under combat conditions. This training served in good stead in the more extensive maneuvers which followed. In the maneuver which brought the I Corps against the II Corps, the 102nd, which was still based at Fort Lawn, covered the flanks of the corps and checked penetrations in the center made by a combat team of the 44th Division. During the operations, the 102nd was attached to the 8th and 9th Divisions by squadrons, later being assembled on the north flank for the final phase of the problem. At this point, the 102nd broke camp at Fort Lawn and moved to the Kershaw area where it took part in a corps maneuver which pitted the 8th and 9th Divisions against the 30th Division. During this exercise, the Second Squadron was attached to the 30th Division and the First Squadron to the 8th Division.

During this exercise close cooperation was maintained with infantry, during and after close-in contact was made. It was the Regiment's first experience with infantry elements. The Second Squadron was commended by commanding general of the 30th Division for the effective delaying action it fought against combat teams of the 9th Division.

Following this exercise, the Second Squadron was specially honored in its selection by Lieutenant General Hugh A. Drum, First Army Commander, to be the north reconnaissance troop of the First Army. The Squadron moved to a bivouac at Albemarle, N. C., and the regiment was not to be reassembled until after maneuvers.

On November 2, the I Army Corps moved out to engage the remainder of the First Army. For this exercise the Corps was strengthened by the support of the First Armored Division. The Horse Squadron was attached to the 8th Division, protecting the right flank of the Corps. The squadron was later relieved by the 8th Reconnaissance Troop and sent north to oppose a hostile threat on Route 9. The provisional reconnaissance troop, which had been formed, was employed to the limit of its capacity. The group distinguished itself by accomplishing four distinct missions on as many fronts in as many hours.

At 11:15 P.M. on Nov. 5, an order directed the immediate movement of the regiment to the north flank, in view of a threatened envelopment of that flank. The 102nd was promptly assembled and in blackout and a driving rain proceeded 35 miles north and reported at 1:45 A.M. to the liaison officer of the 9th Division. The movement was favorably commented on by the Corps Commander at a critique which followed. The Second Squadron, as a unit of the First Army, operating against I Corps distinguished itself by detecting threats of armored elements against the First Army's north flank. The Squadron received the commendation of General Drum for its alertness and efficiency. The 102nd received orders to move its bivouac, along with the I Army Corps, to the Laurenburg area north of the Pee Dee River and then passed to the command of the First Army. The Horse Squadron forded the Pee Dee, filling in the initial gap between the 8th and 30th Divisions which crossed bridges at Cheraw and Society Hill. Almost immediately these divisions were confronted with considerable armored force activity, but were able to make contact after considerable action. The First Squadron thereupon moved to the right of the 30th with the mission of closing the gap between that outfit's left flank and the II Corps which crossed the Pee Dee at Rockingham. It was in this area that the horse units demonstrated their ability to operate in the face of enemy mechanization. They successfully faded in front of tank attacks, reformed and re-established themselves, eliminated individual tanks and half-tracks with the employment of improvised hand grenades. During this time, the Provisional Reconnaissance Troop operated with a battalion of the 117th Infantry and was successful in securing information and reporting composition and movements in rear of the armored forces. When this phase of the problem ended, the horse units were maintaining combat liaison between I and II Corps and the Provisional Reconnaissance Troop was operating in the rear of the Red forces.

OCTOBER-NOVEMBER 1941

The start of the second phase of the G.H.Q. maneuvers saw the 102nd patrolling the line of the Pee Dee River, with the mission of preventing hostile reconnaissance elements from crossing to the east. The 8th and 9th Reconnaissance Troops were attached and with the Provisional Troop were given the mission of protecting the left flank of the I Army Corps.

At the conclusion of the maneuver, the First Squadron was operating between I and II Corps, west of Lynche's River, and a platoon of the provisional group was operating well in the rear and on the avenues of withdrawal of the IV Red Army Corps.

Throughout these phases of the maneuvers, the Second Squadron continued as the First Army Reconnaissance unit north. This part of the 102nd was assigned strategic reconnaissance missions and their complete success was the subject of favorable comment at several critiques. The three detached platoons with the tank-attackers and anti-airborne units (provisional) of the First Army also received commendations from the commanders under whom they operated.

The Regiment returned to Fort Jackson early in December with the realization of the successful accomplishment of all assigned missions.

The "Saber" in various forms has long been associated with the Essex Troop. It appeared, following the arrival of the regiment at Fort Jackson, as a mimeographed weekly. The material and many excellent drawings were all submitted by members of the regiment.

With the departure of the 102nd for the Carolina Maneuvers in September, publication was stopped because of limited facilities in the field and lack of time afforded the "Saber" staff. The "Saber," however, will be remembered for its soldier humor and witty cartoons, some of which are reproduced on this page.

My dear Miss Pulliam:

On behalf of the 102nd Cavalry, I wish to congratulate you on the honors you have received in the recent Festival of Beauty Pageant, and to extend to you the Regiment's cordial invitation to our St. Patrick's Day Ball next Wednesday evening, March 18th.

The men of the 102nd Cavalry feel your presence will add much charm to the occasion, and their plans include ceremonies for commissioning you as Queen of the Regiment.

With best wishes for your future success,

Sincerely yours,

St. Patrick's Day Ball

One of the major social events held by the regiment during its stay at Fort Jackson was the St. Patrick's Day Ball, March 18, 1942. The affair, which was held in Service Club Number One, was typical of a number of dances held during the year. As an added attraction, Miss Virginia Pulliam, who several days before the event had been selected "Miss Columbia," was commissioned "Queen of the Essex Troop." The regimental dance orchestra played and the glee club sang several selections. Music, the commissioning of Miss Pulliam by Col. McGowan and a glee club selection were broadcast over a Columbia radio station.

Dear Colonel McGowan,

Even the excitement of the last week doesn't prevent me from being thrilled by the invitation I received today. Of course I will be glad to accept. The honor conferred on me by the 102nd Cavalry in asking me to be its Queen at the St. Patrick's Day is equalled only by the recent award I received as "Miss Columbia."

I look forward to meeting you and your fine boys of the 102nd at the Ball on Wednesday night.

Gratefully yours,

Tired, Thirsty Essex Troopers Make Joe Very Happy S'uth'ner

Special to Newark News. CAMDEN, S. C.—Joe runs a two- pump gas station and beer joint on Route 1 just south of here, where his usual day's sales amount to a few dollars and sometimes not even that. Prosperity came to Joe the other day in the form of long columns of scout cars, trucks and horse trailers. The vehicles pulled into a field opposite Joe's place and some 1,200 Essex Troopers tumbled out and pitched camp. After inspection late in the afternoon, all of them were trying to push their way into Joe's. Ten minutes later all the beer and soft drinks were gone and Joe's two-by-four station looked the worse for wear. However, Joe wasn't one to let an opportunity like this slip by. He put in calls to distributors nearby and a few minutes' later trucks laden with cold drinks were rolling down the highway. Once more the place looked like a subway station at 5 P. M. Joe estimates that in four hours he sold more beer and soda than in the last four months and he'd like the army to drop in more often. Only next time, he'd like them to leave the partitions. A few more days like that and he could retire "and pick up one of them thar plantations." "It's surprising," Joe told us, "how success just comes along if you wait for it. Here I was a few hours ago a little, no-count pump station on the highway, selling a few gallons of gas a day and maybe drawing a few beers, and tonight I'm a big operator with 1,200 soldiers trying to fight their way into my place and seven people working for me." Later in the evening Joe ran into a little competition. A watermelon peddler spotted the troopers and immediately the price of melons rocketed from 15 to 25 cents. When taps blew, both Joe and the watermelon peddler had nice things to say about the day.

HISTORY OF THE 102nd

CONTINENTAL DRAGOON
(U. S. Cavalry)
1775-1789
Revolutionary War

The rumble of war rolled down from the Valley of the Mohawk, across the broad, rolling hills of western New York State, forded the great river to the north and echoed loud in the tiny settlement of Elizabethtown. There on July 28, 1756, the Royal Governor of New Jersey published His Majesty's declaration of war against the King of France and his realm. The declaration was an answer, to be written in blood and courage, to the massacre of hundreds of British colonists by the French and Indians, who had joined forces against His Majesty's subjects.

The history of the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry is the history of cavalry in Essex County, New Jersey, since that declaration of war which occasioned five companies of foot and two troops of horse to march north to fight in the French and Indian War.

Those musket-bearing cavaliers, mounted on their own horses, were the forerunners of the men who today make the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry.

Through the wars which have marked the birth and growth of America, the horsemen of Essex have galloped, building a tradition of courage and gallantry. In the War for Independence, the War of 1812, the Civil War, the Mexican Border Expedition and the First World War, the cavalymen of Essex played important and dramatic roles. Since January 6, 1942, the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry has been in federal service, training to take its place, once more, in the defense of the nation.

From those early days of flintlocks and powder horns, when the colonists fought to free themselves from the oppression of the mother country, to the present day, when an army of millions is preparing once more to defend this mighty, democratic nation, cavalry has been closely identified with Essex County.

Following the French and Indian campaigns, His Majesty's governor, Thomas Boone, was received July 3, 1760, at Elizabethtown Point by Captain Terrill's Troop of Essex Horse and escorted to the Woodbridge line on his way to the State Capitol at Amboy. On frequent occasions, His Majesty's emissaries and colonials were received upon their landings on these shores by Essex horsemen.

In October, 1775, the Provincial Congress at Trenton passed an act limiting the number of troops of horse to one per county. This appears to be the first action on the part of the colonial congress to put into effect a system of organization in the colonial forces in New Jersey. At that time the Essex County troop, together with 16 companies of foot, paraded at Elizabethtown, which was then part of Essex County and remained so until just prior to the outbreak of the Civil War.

In December of that year, the Light Horse Troop of Essex escorted Martha, the lady of General George Washington, and her party, including the lady of Adjutant General Gates, from Elizabethtown to Newark. The party was en route to Cambridge, Massachusetts, to meet General Washington. Mrs. Washington rode in "a chariot and four, with four black postillions in scarlet and white linens."

During the Revolutionary War, the Essex County troop was first called "Captain Blanchard's Troop of Light Horse of Essex." The troop later in the war was commanded by Captain Marsh and known as his troop.

A newspaper of that day describes the activities of the troop's training day in a paragraph. "On Monday last the Newark Troop held its training day, and notwithstanding the unfavorableness of the weather, performed its exercise with considerable spirit. After the duties of the parade were over, the officers and some of the privates dined at Gifford's and spent the day with the harmony and glee which ought to characterize the citizen soldier."

On his second visit to this country, General Lafayette visited Newark. The Essex Squadron met the famous French general at the Hudson River in Jersey City, where he landed after having been rowed across the meadows to Newark, where a great reception, lasting many days, was held in his honor.

Immediately following the outbreak of the Civil War, the First Regiment Cavalry, Volunteers, was formed. It was officially organized July 22, 1861, as Halsted's Cavalry and received that designation from the War Department.

The New Jersey Cavalry regiment went to Washington September 1, 1861, and encamped at Moridan Hill, D. C. This unit fought through the war with the Army of the Potomac and was present when General Lee yielded his saber to General Grant, the gesture which brought troubled peace after four years of bitter, unrelenting war.

Among the 96 engagements in which the regiment took part were the following major battles: Bull Run, August 29-30, 1862; Fredericksburg, December 11-13, 1862; Stoneman's Raid, April 30, 1863; Gettysburg, July 2-3, 1863; Sheridan's Raid, May 9, 1864; Cold Harbor, June 4, 1864; Raid through the Shenandoah Valley, July, 1864, and Appomattox Court House (Lee's surrender), April 9, 1865.

The regiment was mustered out of service at Vienna, Virginia, July 24, 1865.

Although cavalry had been closely associated with Essex County since colonial days, there was a period following the Civil War, as is the case following all wars, when interest in military organizations declined. In this period of history, when the nation was striving to recover from the effects of four long years of internal strife, there was little military activity in the state and no cavalry functioning in Essex.

The reactivation of cavalry in New Jersey and the birth of the present Essex Troop was the outgrowth of a call for volunteer horsemen to ride at a dedication ceremony in Newark in 1890. Colonel James E. Fleming, a Civil War veteran, acting as grand marshal of a parade which was to precede the unveiling of a statue to Seth Boyden, the inventor, issued a call for mounted escorts. A dozen young members of the Essex Club of Newark answered the call and rode in the parade.

The outcome of the incident was the reorganization of the cavalry troop in Essex County, a unit whose men and horses were to distinguish themselves in the years to follow not only on the grim fields of battle, but also on "the playing fields of Eton." The troop continued as a private organization until May 17, 1893, when it was mustered into the New Jersey National Guard, and designated "Cavalry, Company A," to become, one year later, "The First Troop."

Colonel Fleming had accepted command of the new troop and served until 1895, when he was succeeded by Captain Frederick Frelinghuysen, who held the command until 1899. It was during this latter period that properties were purchased at Roseville Avenue, Newark, and the troop's first armory completed at a cost of nearly $50,000.

Captain R. Wayne Parker followed Captain Frelinghuysen and served until 1902. He was succeeded shortly thereafter by Captain William A. Bryant, who was to lead the troop for a decade or more. Before the end of 1913, there came the expansion and reorganization of the troop into the new "First Squadron Cavalry" and the promotion of Captain Bryant to the rank of major. In that year the honor of escorting Governor Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey when he was inaugurated President of the United States on March 4 was accorded the Essex Troop. It was three years later that the troop was called into federal service and sent to the Mexican border where it served six months. The intensive training it received while stationed at Douglas, Arizona, prepared it for the blood and sacrifice in France. Throughout this period Major Hobart B. Brown was in command of the squadron.

On July 28, 1917, at Sea Girt, New Jersey, the troop was mustered into federal service for the second time. It was immediately moved to Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama, where, with a troop of Maryland Cavalry, it was organized into Headquarters Troop and Companies A and B, 104th Military Police of the 29th Division. There followed nine months of training that prepared the division for overseas service.

During World War I transfers of many members to special assignments and resignation of others to enter Officer Training Schools, greatly reduced the number of Essex Troopers who served with the original organization through the war. Those remaining, however, retained the spirit that has always marked the Essex Troop and won high commendation from Major General Charles G. Morton, division commander.

Ten days after its arrival in France, the 29th Division took its positions in front-line trenches, in the Center Sector, Haute-Alsace. Here detachments of the Headquarters and Military Police were stationed at Belfort, Montreux-Jeune, Fontaine and Montrebellard.

On September 29, 1918, the 29th Division was ordered north to participate in the Meuse-Argonne offensive. Immediately after the arrival of the 104th Military Police in this sector, a cadre was detached to form the 216th Military Police, a still further breaking-up of the old outfit.

The 29th Division was relieved east of the Meuse River on October 27. While moving north to take part in the projected drive on Metz, the Armistice was signed. The 216th Military Police remained in France and moved up to the Army of Occupation where they became one of the outstanding military police units with that force. The 29th Division returned home May 6, 1919, but it was not until July 23 that the 216th M. P. Company containing 35 members of the Essex Troop was mustered out at Camp Dix.

Following the return of the 29th Division from France, Captain Lewis B. Ballantyne, who had commanded Headquarters Troop, 29th Division, sought to reorganize the Essex Troop. Overcoming many obstacles, he succeeded on October 23, 1919, in obtaining from the governor authorization to form one squadron of National Guard cavalry in New Jersey. After experiencing some difficulty in recruiting, the new squadron reached the required federal strength in 1920 and was officially recognized by state and federal governments. Thus the Essex Troop entered upon a new and more active phase of its career.

A year later the tables of organization called for the formation of a regiment. This was achieved and on August 17, 1921, an organization, consisting of two squadrons of three saber troops each, headquarters and service troops and band and medical detachments, was designated the 102nd Regiment Cavalry by the federal government. Captain Ballantyne, who had been promoted to major on organization of the squadron, was made a colonel and given command of the new regiment. The Essex Troop was assigned to the 51st Cavalry Brigade, a unit of the 23rd Cavalry Division.

That period which followed saw the enlargement of the Roseville Avenue Armory, the construction of the Westfield Armory and the purchase of a tract of land on Swamp Road, between St. Cloud and Livingston, on which was constructed the Essex Troop farm and later the West Orange Armory. With the construction of the new quarters and the acquisition of animals and equipment from the federal government, the Essex Troop expanded its activities. Drill was compulsory one night a week and the regiment spent 15 days at Sea Girt each summer engaged in field training. Horse show and polo teams which became prominent in metropolitan circles were organized along with troop and squadron teams which played in intra-regiment leagues.

In 1937 the War Department reorganized eastern cavalry units and the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry and the 110th Cavalry from Massachusetts and Connecticut were brigaded to form the 59th Cavalry Brigade. Colonel Ballantyne, promoted to brigadier general, was given command of the new brigade. Colonel Henry L. Moeller, executive officer since formation of the regiment in 1921, was placed in command of the 102nd.

In November of 1940 the War Department, after two years of experimenting in search of a highly mobile ground reconnaissance force, selected seven national guard and two regular army cavalry regiments to be reorganized as "Horse-Mechanized Cavalry." With a new national emergency in sight, and mobilization already under way, the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry was honored by being selected as one of these.

The new regiment consisted of a rifle squadron (horse), reconnaissance squadron (mechanized), a headquarters troop and service troop, the latter embodying portee equipment for the horse squadron. From a peacetime strength of about 500 men, the organization jumped to a mobilization table of some 1,500 and active recruiting was started immediately.

On January 5, 1941, command of the regiment was given to Colonel Donald W. McGowan, Deputy Adjutant General of New Jersey. The following day, for the third time in its history, the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry was called to federal service. Standing at attention in the armories at Newark, Westfield and West Orange, officers and enlisted personnel of the regiment listened to the brief presidential order inducting them into service. Ten days later the 102nd arrived at Fort Jackson, S. C., to begin a year of training. The reorganization of the regiment brought about changes in troop designation. Old Troop A was mechanized and became F. Troop B was the only troop to retain its designation. Old Troop C was mechanized and became D, and old Troop D became Troop E and was also mechanized. Troop F became Troop C, and E was redesignated Troop A.

The service history of the 102nd Cavalry at Fort Jackson was marked by the determination of the entire organization to reach a peak of efficiency which would enable it to carry out its missions in the field under any combat conditions. The 102nd came out of the Carolina maneuvers with the commendation of the Commanding General, First Army, proving that its aim had been achieved.

Upon arrival at Fort Jackson, Colonel McGowan told his command that he wanted them to act and look like soldiers at all times. He warned them at the outset that they were preparing for war and that training wasn't to be taken lightly. The results of training at the end of 14 months showed that the advice had been taken at face value.

New mechanized equipment for the Second Squadron started to arrive shortly after the 102nd reached its new post. Before many weeks had elapsed, long lines of scout cars, motorcycles, reconnaissance cars and trucks were formed in the regimental motor park. At the same time, the First Squadron received shipments of remounts from the Remount Depot at Front Royal, Virginia, to supplement the horses which had been brought south when the 102nd left New Jersey.

In the early months of training, the regiment was inspected by President Roosevelt, Secretary of War Stimson and Major General John E. Williams, chief of the National Guard Bureau.

Through a winter of "government weather" and an extremely hot summer basic training was advanced to extensive field work. By late summer the 102nd was ready to take its place as the I Army Corps Reconnaissance Regiment. In September it left for the Carolina maneuver area where it remained for the duration of First Army maneuvers, returning to Fort Jackson early in December.

The beginning of hostilities on December 6 brought about a stepped-up training program. Although due allowance was made for recreation and free time, the turn of events made it even more necessary that the regiment attain the highest possible point of combat efficiency.

In the course of the regiment's first year of training, eight enlisted men were commissioned as second lieutenants in the regiment. Many more received appointments to officers' training schools in various branches of the service. Of those who sought commissions by appointment to these schools, 23 went to the Cavalry School at Fort Riley, Kansas; 21 to the Armored Force School at Fort Knox, Ky.; one to the Adjutant General's School at Washington, D. C., and 57 received appointments as flying cadets in the Army Air Corps.

To bring the 102nd to full authorized strength, 466 selectees from New Jersey and New York were assigned to the regiment in April of 1941. Two hundred others, who had completed their basic training at the Cavalry Replacement Center at Fort Riley, were assigned to the regiment in January, 1942.

The regiment lost a number of veteran Essex Troop officers through assignment to other duties during the year. To fill its officer quota, 16 officers were assigned to the 102nd after its induction. Twelve of these came from Fort Riley in February, 1942, all of them newly-commissioned second lieutenants.

Major John V. Brown was assigned to the Army Air Forces, Captains Russel C. Lord and Frank J. Day were assigned to the Military Police School and later promoted to major. These three were the last of the World War veterans of the old troop to leave the regiment.

With aggressor nations threatening the freedom and democracy of America and the God-given rights of man throughout the world, the 102nd Essex Troop Cavalry, after 14 months of intensive training, is prepared once more to take its place in the defense of the nation.

A. Y. CARTWRIGHT, JR.
YORK, SOUTH CAROLINA

March 31, 1942.

My dear Colonel McGowan,

During the maneuvers last fall about one hundred soldiers came by our request to York to spend a Sunday with us. These men by fortunate chance were from the 102nd (Essex Troop) Cavalry. They were of splendid appearance, conduct and personality. Our first thought was that we didn't know the army was like that. We made warm and lasting friendships and have since come to regard that day's happy coincidence as an act of providence. We were without exception captivated by our guests, we remain so. We began to think of the United States Army in terms of the Essex Troop; it was an inspiration to our men who left for service, a comfort to the families who lost them. We are inordinately proud of our association with the 102nd. In the maneuvers we were as partisan as a Dodge fan because of our interest in your regiment and consequently enjoyed the fracas immensely. We know without the murmur of a question that you are the best regiment in the world.

So it may be that you can understand how much the honor given our people last Saturday means to us. We think it the finest thing that has happened to York. Nothing could please us more. The replica of your Coat of Arms is excellently fashioned; the special order which accompanies it is beautifully encribed and exquisitely literate. The sentiment spoken is to us a pearl without price. They shall be given the hallowed spot of our town where they may reflect until the end of our time the glory you have given us.

We wish to thank you as the commanding officer and as the individual who made it possible that we should receive this signal honor. Believe us, sir, that wherever you are or how dim the time our memory of the Essex Troop will stand proudly and new and our earnest prayers shall be for you.

Respectfully yours,

A. Y. Cartwright, Jr.
